> Kill them again. Kill them again, because they didn't die hard enough.

Mr. Speaker, 62 pages of this dialog is not free speech. It is the opposite of free speech. It is an attempt to incite hatred and division in this complex, multiethnic, multireligious society, which has a difficult time, without these incitements to hate and murder, to function in a civil way.

But we are not just dealing with events in this country. We are dealing with a daily diet of the evening news, mass rapes and ethnic cleansing in the former Yugoslavia, where 200,000 innocent civilians have been killed in the last 22 months because of words of hate and bigotry spoken in a similar vein.

A few weeks ago, Mr. Speaker, six little children frolicking in the snow in Sarajevo were killed because of words of this kind. And 2 weeks ago, 68 innocent civilians, men, women and children, were killed in the open market of the city of Sarajevo.

Now, there are colleagues in this House who might claim that these are mere words. Let me remind them that the Holocaust did not begin with the gas chambers. It began with words, words of hate and bigotry, calling for mass murder. And mass murder they did.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that excerpts of the speech of Khalid Abdul Mohammad be placed in the RECORD, and I urge my colleagues to see the kind of vicious, hate-filled statements it contains.

MINISTER LOUIS FARRAKHAN AND THE NATION OF ISLAM CLAIM THEY ARE MOVING TOWARD MODERATION AND INCREASED TOLERANCE—YOU DECIDE

Brothers and sisters—the so-called Jew, and I must say so-called Jew, because you're not the true Jew. You are Johnny-come-lately-Jew, who just crawled out of the caves and hills of Europe just a little over 4,000 years ago. You're not from the original people. You are a European strain of people who crawled around on all fours in the caves and hills of Europe eating Juniper roots and eating each other.

Who are the slumlords in the black community? The so-called Jew who is sucking our blood in the black community. A white imposter Arab and a white imposter Jew, right in the black community, sucking our blood on a daily and consistent basis. They sell us pork and they don't even eat it themselves. A meat case full of rotten pork meat, and the imposter Arab and the imposter white Jew, neither of them eat it themselves. A wall full of liquor keeping our people drunk and out of their head, and filled with the swill of the swine, affecting their minds. They're the blood suckers of the black nation and the black community. Professor Griff was right when he spoke here—and when he spoke in the general vicinity of Jersey and New York, and when he spoke at Columbia Jew-niversity (sic) over in Jew (sic) York City. He was right.

The DeBeers mines, Oppenheimer, our people, our brothers and sisters in South Africa, hundreds of them lose their lives. Sometimes thousands in those mines. Miles underground mining diamonds for white Jews. That's why you call yourself Mr. Reubenstein, Mr. Goldstein, Mr. Silverstein. Because you been stealing rubies and gold and silver all over the earth. That's why we can't even wear a ring or a bracelet or a necklace without calling it Jew-erly We say it real quick and call it jewelry, but it's not jewelry it's Jew-elry cause you're the rogue that's stealing all over the face of the planet earth.

You see everybody always talk about Hitler exterminating 6 million Jews. That's right. But don't nobody ever ask what did they do to Hitler. What did they do to them folks? They went in there, in Germany, the way they do everywhere they go, and they supplanted, they usurped, they turned around and a German, in his own country, would almost have to go to a Jew to get money. They had undermined the very fabric of the society. Now he was an arrogant no-good devil bastard. Hitler, no question about it. He was wickedly great. Yes, he was. He used his greatness for evil and wickedness. But they are wickedly great too, brother. Everywhere they go, and they always do it and hide their head.

We don't owe the white man nothin' in South Africa. He's killed millions of our women, our children, our babies, our elders. We don't owe him nothing in South Africa. If we want to be merciful at all, when we gain enough power from God Almighty to take our freedom and independence from him, we give him 24 hours to get out of town, by sundown. That's all. If he won't get out of town by sundown, we kill everything white that ain't right (inaudible) in South Africa. We kill the women, we kill the children, we kill the babies. We kill the blind, we kill the crippled, (inaudible), we kill 'em all. We kill the faggot, we kill the lesbian, we kill them all. You say why kill the babies in South Africa? Because they gonna grow up one day to oppress our babies, so we kill the babies. Why kill the women? They, they . . . because they lay on their back, they are the military or the army's manufacturing center. They lay on their back and reinforcements roll out from between their legs. So we kill the women too. You'll kill the elders too? Kill the old ones too. Goddamit, if they in a wheelchair, push 'em off a cliff in Cape Town. Push 'em off a cliff in Cape Town, or Johannesburg, or (inaudible), or Port Sheppston or Darbin, how the hell you think they got old. They old oppressing black people. I said kill the blind, kill the crippled, kill the crazy. Goddamit, and when you get through killing 'em all, go to the goddam graveyard and dig up the grave and kill 'em, goddam, again. 'Cause they didn't die hard enough. They didn't die hard enough. And if you've killed 'em all and you don't have the strength to dig 'em up, then take your gun and shoot in the goddam grave. Kill 'em again. Kill 'em again, 'cause they didn't die hard enough.

We found out that the Federal Reserve ain't really owned by the Federal Government . . . But it ain't owned by the Federal Government. The Federal Reserve is owned by, you just touched on it a little while ago. (Jews.) It's owned by the Jews.

Brother. I don't care who sits in the seat at the White House. You can believe that the Jews control that seat that they sit in from behind the scenes. They control the finance, and not only that, they influence the policy-making.

No white Jews ever in bondage in Egypt for 400 years. You're not the chosen people of God. Stop telling that lie. Let's go a little further with this. Many of you put out the textbooks. Many of you control the libraries, Lie-braries. NBC, ABC, CBS, you don't see nothin', or makes sure we don't see, Warner Brothers, Paramount, huh? Hollywood, period.

But [they] also are most influential in newspaper, magazine, print media and electronic media.

These people have had a secret relationship with us. They have our entertainers in their hip pocket. In the palm of their hand, I should say. They have our athletes in the palm of their hand.

Many of our politicians are in the palm of the white man's hand, but in particular, in the palm of the Jewish white man's hand.

The Jews have told us, the so-called Jews have told us, ve (sic) ve, ve suffer like you. Ve, ve, ve, ve marched with Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Ve, ve, ve were in Selma, Alabama. Ve, ve were in Montgomery, Alabama. Ve, ve were in Montgomery, Alabama. Ve, ve, were on the front line of the civil rights marches. Ve have always supported you. But let's take a look at it. The Jews, the so-called Jews, what they have actually done, brothers and sisters, is used us as cannon fodder.

Go to the Vatican in Rome, when the old, no-good Pope, you know that cracker. Somebody need to raise that dress up and see what's really under there.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, abhorrent as the remarks of the speaker at Kean College in New Jersey were, I do not think enough attention is being given to the enthusiastic response that his hateful words received from his college student audience. The applause of those young people scares me a lot more than the idiotic statements that were made by this person, and I think that there is an awful lot of work to be done to understand why such language has such an appeal to so many young people.

Mr. Speaker, the language of this resolution does not call for any civilian or criminal penalties. It does, however, flatly express the sense of Congress that the deliberate abuse of another's deeply held beliefs and the systematic abuse of another's deeply held beliefs and the systematic condemnation of persons based on ethnicity, race, or religion is an offense to democratic civility, and this resolution is an expression of our right of freedom of speech to condemn what we find patently contemptible. Free speech should be an instrumentality to communicating ideas in the quest for truth.

The emotional consequences of this sort of language are the enemy of free discourse, because they guarantee a reaction that is the adversary of reason and orderly debate. Comments such as these are not made to persuade or to convince, but to insult, to vilify, to wound, or to hurt. They have an unhealthy effect of fracturing our democratic political community.

Despite the best efforts of so many good and decent people, hatred and friction between the races continues to be a grave problem. We should look for ways to diminish that hatred. These remarks have the effect of worsening, not lessening, the friction between men and women of different races and religions. Thus, it is appropriate that such language and other language like it receive our strongest condemnation. Free speech is not impinged upon by our condemnation. It is only exercised on our behalf and on behalf of other civilly mutually respectful discourse.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COBLE].

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, the remarks this resolution condemns serve no good purpose, and such comments must be condemned. To silently ignore such verbal attacks is not adequate, Mr. Speaker. We must openly and notoriously oppose it; yes, even condemn it.

The attack upon Jews, Catholics, Caucasians, offends me, but I would be equally offended as well if the speaker had been Caucasian and his target had been people whose skin is black. The salient point to be made, it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, is that we cannot stand idly by and observe speakers, regardless of the color of the speaker's skin, who assume their roles at podiums across this land and spew out sulfuric words, whipping up listening audiences into a mob-like frenzy.

Just as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] said, little has been said about that. I believe equally offensive to the speech delivered is the response that was forthcoming by the listening audience. Today, Mr. Speaker, this Congress I hope will condemn these remarks, and condemn the speech that was made, and in so doing, we send a signal from this Hall that it will not be tolerated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). The gentleman from California [Mr. LANTOS] has consumed 7½ minutes.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LEWIS], the majority whip.

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. LANTOS], for yielding time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to urge my colleagues to support House Resolution 343. As people of conscience, we have a moral obligation to speak out against injustice, bigotry, racism, and anti-Semitism.

For more than 35 years, I have been part of a struggle against bigotry, racism, discrimination, and anti-Semitism. During those years, I have learned that one must always be on guard in the fight against bigotry. It knows no limitations or borders.

I know there are some who would say that what we are doing is out of the ordinary. But these are unusual and extraordinary times. There are some immutable principles that are nonnegotiable, we must not turn away from them.

I deeply feel that we have a moral obligation and a mandate and a mission to speak out against the remarks made by Khalid Abdul Muhammad at Kean College. Mr. Muhammad delivered a poisonous and hateful speech. In that speech, he said awful and bad things about African-Americans, about Jews, about Catholics and about members of the gay community.

These remarks represented an obscene and ugly attack on decency. When any one of us is attacked, all of us are attacked. There is no room in our society for the expression of bigotry, anti-Semitism, and racism. Any time, such hateful expression rears its ugly head, it should not go unchallenged.

In another period of our history, just a few years ago, there was a coalition of conscience that worked together in a struggle to create a truly interracial democracy in America—to create what I like to call the Beloved Community. People from all walks of life and from around the country struggled together during the civil rights movement to make this Nation a better place, to make our society a more humane society.

I can never forget 30 years ago in 1964, when three young men in Mississippi were killed in the struggle for civil rights. These three men, Mickey Schwerner, Andrew Goodman, and James Chaney—two young Jewish men and an African-American—died in the fight for freedom, not in Africa, not in Asia, not in Europe, not in Central America, but here in America, fighting for freedom. They were fighting and struggling for the right of all to vote.

I speak from experience. This is not something I read in the newspaper or watched on television. I saw young blacks and young Jews struggling, fighting and shedding blood together 30 years ago. We stood together during times of difficulty. We must continue to do so now. As Americans, we should be about the business of building a truly interracial democracy, rather than dividing people along racial, ethnic, and religious lines.

Yes, we all have a responsibility to speak out against bigotry and intolerance. We can never, never turn a deaf ear or a blind eye to hate. In a real sense, we are one nation; one community; one people; we are one house, the American house; we are one family, the American family.

I urge Members to support House Resolution 343.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY].

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Speaker, one of the problems with free speech is that from time to time it is abused. Such was the case when Kahlid Abdul Muhammad took to the podium in Kean, NJ, in November. I am not going to reiterate what has been said. He has been quoted here enough. Suffice it to say his speech was racist. It promoted hate. Many of us would have preferred that Kahlid Abdul Muhammad would never have opened his mouth that day, but he did.

What is the remedy for speech that is offensive, as has been coming too often from the leadership of the nation of Islam? The answer, I think, is more speech, speech from good, decent, and thinking people who are revulsed by what has been said; people, I think, like the vast majority of the people that we all represent.

On their behalf we have to speak out today. We must label the Muhammad speech for what it is. And what it is, is racist hate mongering.

There should be nothing controversial about what we are doing here today. In fact, in the other body a vote on a similar resolution was 97 in favor and none against.

Censorship has no place in our law, but racism has no place in our culture. We cannot quiet the racists among us, but we can drown them out.

Let us help the gentleman from California [Mr. LANTOS] do that today by passing his resolution.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. RANGEL].

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for bringing up this resolution and also reminding Members of this House of Representatives of the pain and the suffering of so many Jewish people in Germany that occurred because no one spoke out when people said that Hitler was just another talker.

There are some Members who have come to me in opposition to this resolution because of the procedure that was followed or the lack of procedure. Others have some concerns about freedom of speech. But let me say this to my friends and colleagues, that nobody in this House should walk away where there is any doubt in anybody's mind that the U.S. Congress finds these type of remarks not only repugnant as relates to what this person in Jersey has said, but repugnant for what this great republic and democracy stands for.

Had it not been for the gentleman from California [Mr. LANTOS], I would not even have known that a procedure existed that would give us the opportunity in this House of Representatives to pull out from the slime and the snakepits of this country those who want to split it by being anti-Semitic, by being racist, and by being against the things that have made this country so great. I would like to say that there are many of us who are African-Americans who have reached out to try to feel the pain that our Jewish brothers and sisters feel because we have never been in a struggle that we have had to call on them and they were not there. And that is true whether it took place in the South or whether it took place in the south Bronx.

In the future I hope that the Jewish and the African-American community can build such a bond that is not restricted to the idiots and the bigots that we find in this country, but by building to represent those true beliefs that both of our people have always believed in, investment in education, opportunity and the ability to make this country even greater than it is today. For what you have contributed by never letting us forget what people have suffered and the lives that were lost because so many did, including Americans, may we all never forget what has happened to so many others so that together we can make not only a better America but a better world.

I thank the gentleman for the generosity that he has extended to me in this time.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH] the minority whip.

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend from Illinois for yielding me the time, and I want to thank the gentleman from California [Mr. LANTOS] for his leadership in pursuing this and ensuring that this is brought to the attention of the House, and that the House is given an opportunity to communicate with the country, because I think it is important to recognize what we are doing here and what we are not doing.

We are not suggesting that it is illegal, we are not suggesting that the gentleman who said these hateful things should go to jail, we are not suggesting the repression of thought. We are suggesting the right of every American to stand up and condemn hateful thought. And we are suggesting in fact that there is a certain responsibility, whatever our ethnic background, whatever our religious beliefs, that understand that America is a remarkable dream held together by our willingness to tolerate each other, and that our support for each other, whether it is Jewish, Christian, Moslem, Buddhist, a variety of backgrounds, and I happen to be a Baptist, and my good friend from Illinois, Mr. HYDE, happens to be a Catholic, but we recognize within the fraternal concern for freedom that there have to be some boundaries, and occasionally, sadly, some people cross those boundaries.

I was asked when David Duke asserted that he was a Republican if I would go on television. I think I was the first Republican who was asked to go on television to speak on Night Line, and I went on Night Line and I had to explain that we together in the Republican Party did not have room for people who hate, for people who are racists and bigots. And I think it is the same feeling as I stand here today, recognizing that it is not about politics in the narrower sense, but it is about political freedom in the greater sense.

It is sad that there is even a debate over this. And I would appeal to Mr. Farrakahn, and I would appeal to those of his most active staff to look into their own hearts and to understand what they are doing to isolate themselves at a time when I think there has been a sincere effort to reach out and begin to try to work with them, and begin to try to find a common ground, and now to have this kind of a speech coming between us, and to now have these kinds of hateful remarks, remarks which are racist, remarks which reflect religious bigotry, and remarks which I think cannot be allowed to stand without condemnation.

So I just say on behalf of many of the Members in both parties that there is a feeling of reaching out and saying as Americans there has to be some standard beyond which we say this we cannot tolerate. Not that it is illegal, not that you do not have the right to free speech, but as one of the great founders of television news, Fred Friendly has said, the fact that you have the right to say something does not mean it is the right thing to say, and the fact that you have the right to do something does not mean that it is the right thing to do. And I think in this case it simply went beyond the bounds of decency.

I thank all of my colleagues from both parties who are rising today to express their commitment to the American dream of all of us living and working together.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHUMER].

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from California and all of my colleagues for their remarks. I think we have no moral choice here. To me this is not an issue over free speech. Free speech, unfortunately, allows people like Mr. Muhammad to say what he wants. Free speech should impel us to say that it is wrong.

But I would like to explain to many of my colleagues here who wonder, in all good faith, what is the fuss, why is it that we take someone who obviously has very poisonous views, views contrary to what every one of us have, whatever our race, our religion, our creed or color, wherever we come from, why do we take this time because it does, unfortunately, bring more attention to these hateful remarks? The answer is, at least for me and many of the people from my community rooted in history, the answer is that once in the past we ignored hateful language because it came from a nut. A man in Germany in 1923 tried a coup to overthrow the German Government, and basically the rest of the world ignored it. He was a nut. He has no power. And in 1925 when he wrote Mein Kampf with words eerily reminiscent of the words uttered by Mr. Muhammad, he was a nut; he should not be paid attention to. And in 1928 when the power of his party grew, and in 1932 when Hindenburg, the leader of the German establishment, handed over the keys to the government to this man, he was a nut, and he should be ignored.

Let me say right here the group that is burdened the greatest with this ignoring what happened were the Jewish people in America at that time. They said he was a nut, and they ignored it. And then the worst occurred.

We have vowed that we should never ignore this again. We have a historical lesson. We have lived through it.

I know that some of my colleagues will say should this body spend all of its time condemning people. No, it should not. But should other groups, whether they be African-American, Latino, Catholic, gay, whatever, on an occasion when they feel threatened have the privilege of coming to the well of the floor and saying we must as a body condemn what was done? Yes, by all means.

That is not again an option. That is our moral responsibility, and if we do it in a sincere way, in a way that is not hateful or divisive but unifying, as my good colleague from New York said, we can build on that and start doing the positive things that we ought to be doing together as well.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Hawaii [Mr. ABERCROMBIE].

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield to no one in this House in my respect for the gentleman from California [Mr. LANTOS] and his strong support for human rights. The record is well known. We are colleagues in the Human Rights caucus.

I find myself, unfortunately, in a position of rising to disagree on this issue. This is a question of free speech.

We are acting in an institutional capacity here today, and I urge all of you who are listening, all of you who are observing today and are going to vote on this, we are being asked to do this as an institution.

The first amendment says that Congress shall make no law respecting the establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press. The universal declaration of human rights, which I also subscribe to, and we are members of the United Nations, everyone has the right to freedom of opinion and expression. This right includes freedom to hold opinions without interference and to seek, receive, and impart information and ideas through any media regardless of frontiers.

When one stands up and says it is not free speech, it is. Free speech means driving bad speech out with good speech. It means taking the responsibility in meeting the obligation of resisting tyranny and intolerance everywhere we find it, and we do have the right to do that, the obligation to do that as Members of Congress. But we do not, and should not, have as an institution this right and this privilege to condemn others for what they have said or done.

This resolution could easily apply as an unpatriotic, un-American, subversive speech against the Vietnam war. Pick anything and you could do the same thing.

I recall very clearly in "A Man for All Seasons" by Robert Bolt, when Thomas More's son-in-law confronts him with the necessity of getting to the devil, he says, "I would cut down all the laws of this land to get to the Devil," and More replies to him, "Yes, and when you have cut down all of those laws and the Devil turns to get you, what then will you use for a defense?"

I can tell you what will happen from this, those of us who feel strongly on this issue will be seen by others to affirm anti-Semitism, affirm anti-Catholicism, affirm racism if we do not vote; we will be put into the position again and again of saying,

> If you do not condemn it as we require of you institutionally in this resolution, you will be seen as having affirmed that which has offended someone, that which is subversive, if you will, to the intent of the Constitution.

I say this: As a human being and as an individual Member of Congress, I condemn bigotry, I condemn hatred. It is my privilege and duty to do so. But when this House, constitutionally established as an arm of the Federal Government, contemplates official action in the same vein, we are confronted with a much different proposition. Governmental sanction against any speech, objectionable as it may be, is always suspect, is always suspect.

The Constitution has proven to be our strongest safeguard against the Muhammads of the world. Let us revere the Constitution of the United States and vote down this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I want to make it abundantly clear that I abhor and am implacably opposed to the antisemitism, anti-Catholic bigotry, racism, homophobia and defamation of African-American leaders expressed in the speech by Mr. Kahlid Abdul Muhammad at Kean College on November 29, 1993. Further, I acknowledge and share the concern, pain, and outrage which motivated those who bring this measure to the floor.

The fact that I am constrained to preface my remarks with that disclaimer illustrates the nature of my objection to this measure. We who are Members of this body know that our every utterance or lack thereof, our every vote, our presence or absence at this or that event is subject to scrutiny, to analysis * * * and all to often to misinterpretation. Some occasions, however, hold more potential than others for misinterpretation, particularly the kind of misinterpretation motivated by malice. This is one of them.

There are many Members here today who agree with the distinguished chairman of our Judiciary Subcommittee on Civil and Constitutional Rights, who in a Dear Colleague letter of February 22, argued against this resolution. He based his arguments on the Bill of Rights, the philosophy of Thomas Jefferson, and the role of this House and its Members in the public life of our Nation. Yet each and every one of us knows that invoking these ideas in this case will be seen by some, or made to be seen, as sophistry.

I am not saying that we should avoid controversy or decisions that are subject to misinterpretation. I assert, rather, that by opening the door to this pressure in this instance, we are helping Mr. Muhammad accomplish the goal I suspect he had in mind when he made his speech: provoking reaction rather than persuading the unconvinced. Is this House to be stampeded every time some extremist spews forth words of hate? If we become the pawn of Mr. Muhammad by passing this resolution, where do we begin the catalog of unacceptable pronouncements which we must now condemn if we are to hold ourselves to a single standard?

As a human being and as an individual Member of Congress, I have condemned the bigotry and hatred in Mr. Muhammad's speech. It is my privilege and duty to do so. But when this House, a constitutionally established arm of the Federal Government, contemplates official action in the same vein, we are confronted with a much different proposition. Governmental sanction against any speech, objectionable as it may be, is always suspect. The Constitution has proven to be our strongest safeguard against the political currents Mr. Muhammad is attempting to generate. I believe we would be well advised to continue to look to the Constitution rather than official condemnation as the best way to foster the atmosphere of good will we seek in the civic life of our Nation.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Maryland wish me to yield?

Mr. MFUME. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to offer a friendly amendment to the amendment in hopes of bringing balance and substance to this debate and to this issue of repudiation that go directly to the heart of remarks made by a gentleman of the other body.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). Does the gentleman from California yield for a unanimous-consent request of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. LANTOS. Under the rules, I do not accept that amendment, Mr. Speaker, but I will be happy to yield to my friend for debate purposes only.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. How much time does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. LANTOS. Two minutes.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He just has 2 minutes to debate. Does the gentleman object to him——

Mr. RANGEL. I do not know whether I am gong to have to vote against or for it, so I would just like to reserve the right to object to find out from the gentleman. He described it as being friendly, but I just would want to know exactly what is in it.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, for the RECORD, I would like to yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Maryland.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is nothing to object to at this time, the Chair states to the gentleman from New York, and the gentleman from Maryland is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. RANGEL. So there is no unanimous-consent request in front of the House at this time, then, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is correct.

Mr. RANGEL. All right.

Mr. MFUME. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order for an additional 2 minutes.

Mr. RANGEL. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is recognized on his reservation of the right to object.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the amendment is going to be germane or whether it is going to be connected with this resolution in any way.

There were no papers being passed out, and I just did not want this to move forward without reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman an additional minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland now has 4 minutes.

Mr. MFUME. Mr. Speaker, am I not using that 4 minutes in responding to the right to object reserved by the gentleman from New York?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Would the gentleman state that again?

Mr. MFUME. Am I on the time of the gentleman from New York who has reserved the right to object, or am I on the 4 minutes that have been allocated?

Mr. MFUME. So the gentleman from New York controls the time?

Mr. RANGEL. I am trying to find out from the author of this amendment how could it be related to this amendment and whether it is inviting, whether it has been distributed, what it is that you bring before this House at this time.

Mr. MFUME. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANGEL. Reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Let the Chair clarify it. There is no amendment pending. The gentleman from California objected, or would object, to unanimous-consent request of offering an amendment. He has that authority under the rules.

Mr. RANGEL. The gentleman requested additional time, and I objected to the additional time until I could be satisfied that it is going to be used in a parliamentary way.

Mr. MFUME. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANGEL. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. MFUME. The amendment that I had hoped to offer was an amendment that would have brought balance to this debate in which all of us have a sense of outrage and revulsion at remarks that were made at Kean College, but many of us also have a sense of outrage and revulsion at remarks made by a Member of the other body recently in which black people were referred to as darkies, Hispanics were referred to as wetbacks, and Africans were referred to as cannibals.

I think that, in order that we have some balance before us, not to even mention the issue of free speech which is legitimate, that is why I wanted to offer this amendment, and I regret that the gentleman would not accept it.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would like to remind the gentleman in the well that he cannot refer to Members of the other body and statements made by that Member of the other body.

The gentleman now has 4 minutes of time yielded to him.

Mr. MFUME. Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Chair. Is the Chair telling me that I cannot say or make mention of a Member of the other body as long as I do not use that person's name?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman, under the rules, cannot refer to statements made by the Members of the other body.

Mr. MFUME. If I could ask further, may I have permission to refer to statements made from someone from South Carolina?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If that is a Member from the other body, the gentleman cannot do that.

Mr. MFUME. With all due respect, there are many people from South Carolina. I am not necessarily mentioning a Member of the other body but a resident of the State of South Carolina.

Mr. MFUME. I thank the Chair very much.

Let me be perfectly clear: By attempting to offer the amendment that I did, I did not in any way mean to diminish the offensive comments addressed by the Lantos resolution. As I have said repeatedly, I also find them racist, sexist, anti-Semitic, anti-Catholic, and homophobic.

As I have further stated, I repeatedly, over and over again, hear from others that say that these things have to be addressed, and yet we seem to be selective in that which we seek to address.

The sad matter of the whole thing is that no matter how offensive those remarks are, there have been other remarks that have been uttered in public that have been just as offensive, to be sure. Take, for example, remarks uttered by a person who resides in the State of South Carolina, the subject of the amendment that I tried to address, where black people were referred to as darkies, Hispanics were referred to previously as wetbacks, Africans were referred to in last December as Cannibals.

In spite of how repulsive and offensive those remarks are and the way we find them to be, we certainly have not seen a resolution in this body or the other body that seeks to condemn them. Not until this unfortunate event have we underscored even in the most inadvertent of ways the extent to which a double standard is at play in this Nation when it comes to offensive remarks.

Since those remarks were attributed and made, every member of the black leadership has been called on to repudiate them, elected officials, teachers, community leaders and preachers. While we all find them to be offensive, we cry out for balance and cry out for honesty with one to another. In other words, we have been called upon like no other group of people have been called upon to respond and to react to an unfortunate set of remarks. We think there ought to be, at least, some balance.

Let me say this, Mr. Speaker, for the record: Black people are neither lazy, shiftless, or the irresponsible people that people in the media oftentimes portray us to be, nor the second-class citizens that the racists in our society try to make us to be.

We have a right to demand respect also and to ask others to hold themselves to the measurements that they would hold us to.

For example, if we pass this resolution, which does not decry the speech in question as hateful and harmful toward homosexuals, and it does not, even though the speech was, are we saying it is OK to criticize the Pope or someone else but it is not OK to go out and to do some of the things that Mr. Muhammad does in his speech? In other words, "Don't do this about the Pope," and "Don't do this about Catholics, but you can say what you want to about lesbians and gays."

Lastly, let me say one thing about the issue of free speech: It is without a doubt one of the most important liberties that we as Americans enjoy. The French philosopher Voltaire once said that, "While I disapprove of what you say, I will defend to my death your right to say it."

It is doubtful that I would be here today in this Congress if many people in this country who were offended in the 1960's by the remarks of Martin Luther King had been able to silence him and his words. While it is our duty as leaders to stand up in our communities and to speak out against harmful words, harmful deeds, and harmful remarks, it is also our duty to be guarantors of the Constitution, protecting the fundamental rights of Americans here and those still yet unborn.

By passing the sense-of-the-Congress resolution before us, we are getting ready all of us now to step over a line that will set perhaps a very dangerous precedent. As I had said earlier, I will continue to speak out against hatred and bigotry and racism and anti-semitism, and I ask all of us to do so as well. But if we are to do so, let us not be selective about who we rush to defend when others are in need of our help.

I would prefer that my colleagues look closely beyond this debate and try to find ways, as the gentleman from California [Mr. LANTOS], has, and many others, to end the things in our society that bring about the need in some to make these kinds of remarks.

I thank the gentleman for his position on this, I thank the gentleman for his inquiry on this, and I thank the Chair for the time.

Mr. Speaker, I again thank the gentleman on the other side, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] also for his kindness.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Civil Rights of the Committee on the Judiciary, the gentleman from California [Mr. EDWARDS].

Mr. EDWARDS of California. I thank the gentleman for graciously yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, it occurred to me, listening to this very interesting debate, that we are making a national and international hero out of this scoundrel who has uttered these disgraceful, awful things. He will be the only person in world history, to the best of my knowledge, whose speech has been officially condemned by the U.S. Congress. I can see advertisements all over the world, especially in those parts of the world who do not look kindly on the United States, "Speech by Mr. Muhammad tonight. This speech has been condemned by the United States Congress."

You know, Sam Donaldson makes $25,000 a speech. Maybe Mr. Muhammad in certain parts of the world, certain countries, can now make lucrative speeches because of what we are going to do today and what the other body, unthinkingly did the other day.

Has it ever happened before where the U.S. Congress officially condemned a speech?

As the gentleman from Maryland said, has Congress officially condemned the speech of Martin Luther King or the Ku Klux Klan leader? You know, Mr. Speaker and my friends, each of us ought to condemn the terrible, obscene things that Mr. Muhammad said at Kean College. We ought to carry signs around. We ought to have special orders at night and get up one after another and condemn the speech. We ought to write newspaper articles about the speech. It is terrible, really, it is disgraceful.

But, my friends, we have no business officially taking a speech and condemning it.

My friend, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE], I believe said this is not making it a crime or anything like that. No, we are not. But we are certainly chilling free speech. Yes, it is hateful speech, but it is entitled to be heard. And as one other eloquent person said, the way to counteract that is through free speech by the rest of us.

So I invite us all to make every speech we want, pen newspaper articles, or anything, condemning this obscene speech made by Mr. Muhammad. But let us not go down this path. It is a very dangerous path to go down to start condemning officially. We are paid by the Government, this is an official act of the Government.

What is next? A movie? A particular movie that just shocks us? A newspaper article we do not like?

What is next? What a precedent this will be.

Yes, ironically we may make Mr. Muhammad a rich, famous man, but we are doing the Constitution real damage.

Mr. Speaker, this vote calls on us to reconcile the necessity for tolerance in a diverse society with the freedoms guaranteed by the Bill of Rights.

Despite my strong opposition to Mr. Muhammad's reprehensible remarks, I will vote against the resolution.

As elected officials and leaders, we have a responsibility to fight intolerance and to speak out against expressions of bigotry. But our powers as the institution of Congress are subject to the Bill of Rights.

Any Member has an absolute right to make a 1-minute or take out a special order to condemn the Kean College speech or any other specific expression of bigotry and racism. "The remedy to be applied," Justice Brandeis once wrote, "is more speech, not enforced silence."

However, we would cross a constitutional line were we to vote official, congressional disapproval of this specific speech.

The resolution condemning the Kean College speech makes the Congress into an official ratings board, scanning the landscape for speeches to label "Condemned by Congress." If we officially condemn this one speech, how can we not condemn others? Will our silence in the face of future offensive speeches constitute tacit acquiescence? Will we condemn books and magazines next? Offensive movies? The racist or sexist comments of one another?

Government is not powerless in the face of racial, ethnic, or religious intolerance: hate crimes are subject to severe punishment, and have been raised to a high priority by both Federal and local authorities. Nevertheless, the Constitution limits Government's choice of weapons with which to fight intolerance. Where the intolerance we fight is expressed in words, the first amendment imposes limits: we cannot use the power of the Government to condemn speech, however offensive.

As Thomas Jefferson once said,

> We have nothing to fear from the demoralizing reasonings of some, if others are left free to demonstrate their errors and especially when the law stands ready to punish the first criminal act produced by the false reasonings.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] has 16 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from California [Mr. LANTOS] has 6 minutes left.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that an additional 20 minutes be allotted, evenly divided between the two sides.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Twenty minutes?

Mr. LANTOS. Ten minutes for each side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California [Mr. LANTOS] will be recognized for an additional 10 minutes, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] will be recognized for an additional 10 minutes.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN].

Mr. GILMAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I am honored to rise in support of House Resolution 343, legislation condemning the racist, anti-Catholic, and anti-Semitic speech of Khalid Abdul Muhammad, a senior representative of the nation of Islam. This resolution denounces all forms of racial, religious, and ethnic intolerance and I commend the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. LANTOS], for introducing this resolution condemning bigotry and racism.

As an original cosponsor of House Resolution 343, I am pleased that my colleagues in the House of Representatives have this opportunity to discuss this important resolution.

It is highly important that we discuss this issue today. Racial intolerance within our communities, ethnic violence around the world, and religious persecution are frightening examples of the devastating affects of bigotry and fanaticism. It is for this reason that many of us in this body have found Khalid Abdul Muhammad's remarks so reprehensible.

Mr. Muhammad's rhetoric, made during his speech at Kean College on November 29, 1993, symbolized the hatred, contradicts the foundation of our great Nation, and threatens to destroy the very framework of our open society.

By preaching hatred, we incite and condone violence; by moralizing intolerance, we tolerate racism and bigotry; and by relying upon hateful rhetoric, we validate racial stereotypes.

Instead of slandering our brothers, we must unite. We must join against the forces that threaten to destroy our future. As the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., so eloquently said, "We must all learn to live together as brothers or we will all perish together as fools. That is the challenge of the hour." Reverend King's comments could not be truer today, than when he said them decades ago.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution does not abridge the rights of free speech but does condemn the content and substance of Khalid Abdul Muhammad's offensive remarks.

Accordingly, I urge my colleagues to support this important measure. For the passage of House Resolution 343 is a dramatic step in combating ethnic and religious intolerance that threatens the fabric of our society.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentlewoman from New York [Mrs. MALONEY].

Mrs. MALONEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the resolution.

Mr. Speaker, it is troubling that bringing this resolution to the floor has caused some disagreement among us. Instead, this resolution should unite us.

You do not have to be Jewish to be outraged by Mr. Muhammad's justification of the Holocaust.

You do not have to be African-American to condemn his attack against those African-Americans who do not share his distorted views.

You do not have to be a lesbian or a gay man to reject his vicious smears against these individuals.

And you do not have to be Catholic to be offended by his obscene caricature of the Pope.

Mr. Speaker, this is not an issue of free speech.

Mr. Muhammad is free to say what he wishes.

But make no mistake—the American people—through us in this body as their elected Representatives—are free to condemn this kind of hate speech and reaffirm the true American values of tolerance and human dignity. And we must.

Please support the resolution.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as she may consume to the distinguished gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. KENNELLY].

Mrs. KENNELLY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express support for House Resolution 343, condemning the hateful speech of Khalid Muhammad.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that no right is more basic and no freedom more greatly protected than the right to free speech. As an individual and a public official, I remain deeply committed to the idea that we are entitled to express our thoughts and our opinions, no matter how unpopular. This is clearly an issue of free speech.

But just as Mr. Muhammad is free to express his deeply wrong ideas, the rest of us are free to point out, clearly and unequivocally, how wrong he is. We are free to point out the tragedy that such unanswered vituperation leads to. And we are free to stand side by side with the individuals and groups Mr. Muhammad has maligned, and to say that his remarks will not go unanswered.

Mr. Speaker, sometimes it is not enough to stand against hatred and bigotry in the abstract. Sometimes one must acknowledge an act for what it is and condemn it. I believe Mr. Muhammad's speech was such a case, and I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting House Resolution 343.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ZIMMER].

Mr. ZIMMER. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to be a cosponsor of this resolution and to speak on its behalf, particularly because the vicious words that gave rise to it were uttered in my State of New Jersey and because Kahlid Abdul Muhammad is scheduled to speak Monday evening in my district at Trenton State College.

I have helped organize a vigil of conscience for Monday evening at a church near the college so that our local religious, civic, and academic leaders of all races and all faiths can reaffirm the message voiced here in the House today—that the vicious bigotry peddled by Muhammad and condoned by Louis Farrakhan has no place in America.

Farrakhan and Muhammad have reminded us that the United States is not immune from the religious and ethnic hatred that infects so much of the world. Americans of all religions and all colors must unite to fight this pestilence whenever and wherever it makes itself known.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK].

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I join in supporting this resolution. Let me explain why I think it is reasonable to single out Mr. Muhammad's speech from the welter of vicious nonsense that is out there. Unfortunately the auspices of that speech, and particularly Mr. Farrakhan's implicit affirmation of its substance, and I disagreed with its tone, but he said he could not repudiate its substance, so unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, that has given it an aura of respectability in some quarters. We are not talking now just about some raving lunatic. We are talking about a raving lunatic, but he is, unfortunately, not just a raving lunatic. He was a high-ranking representative of Mr. Farrakhan's movement, supported in his substance by Mr. Farrakhan, and that does, I think, require us to speak out.

I agree with those like the gentleman from Maryland who eloquently pointed out that we have not criticized others. I wish we would change the rule that immunizes Members of the U.S. Senate from ever being discussed by us. We can respond to anybody in the world except the U.S. Senate. That is a bad rule, but I do not allow that bad rule to say that we cannot respond to other cases, and the response and reception that Mr. Muhammad has been receiving on college campuses and the support he has gotten from Mr. Farrakhan justifies our saying that we think this is vicious nonsense.

It is not, from my standpoint, a perfect resolution. I wish it had included in the resolution reference to his antigay and lesbian remarks. I welcome the comments of many here who have added in their speeches condemnation of that homophobia, and I hope we will continue to work for recognition that homophobia has been as vindictive, and as vicious, and as dangerous in its negative effects on innocent people as other forms of prejudice, but I will not allow that to restrain me from also voting for this resolution. I will work for that when we have to deal with this again, and, if we do, then it will be broader.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I do not regard this as in any way chilling. I will say to my colleagues it is hard to argue simultaneously that we have cured Mr. Muhammad and made him a big shot. I think, in fact, that, if one says terrible and vicious things, one has no right to silence them from people who think they were terrible and vicious. All we do today is to exercise our right of free speech in response to the free speech of Mr. Muhammad.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. ROUKEMA].

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this resolution.

I would point out to my colleagues that there can be no excuse made for the remarks of Khalid Abdul Muhammad. Such blatant bigotry is abhorrent, and should be condemned by every Member of this House. The speech delivered at Kean College was hate-filled and racist. It is a stain on the ethnic, racial, religious, and cultural fabric of my home State, which enjoys a rich and progressive heritage.

In fact, I do not understand why Kean College, and New Jersey State education leadership have not more forcefully condemned this hateful tirade.

Make no mistake: Muhammad's speech should not only offend those targeted in Muhammad's tirade—it should offend the sensibilities of every intelligent man and woman in America. It is incumbent upon us to speak out against this ignorance and hate.

There is an aphorism, passed on from the legacy of the horrific genocide of the Holocaust:

> They came first for the Communists, and I didn't speak up because I wasn't a Communist. Then they came for the Jews, and I didn't speak up because I wasn't a Jew. Then they came for the trade unionists, and I didn't speak up because I wasn't a trade unionist. Then they came for the Catholics, and I didn't speak up because I was a Protestant. Then they came for me, and by that time no one was left to speak up.

My colleagues, today we cannot afford to be silent. We must condemn the hate, the bigotry, and the violence advocated by Khalid Abdul Muhammad, today and always.

I am deeply troubled not only by the remarks of Muhammad—one man's ramblings which we can repudiate—but for the message of hate and divisiveness that goes to our young people, our children.

Among the most serious long-term problems facing our Nation, and each of our communities is bigotry, racial, and cultural enmity. The troubling increases we have seen in bias crimes and incidents of intolerance demonstrate this: Last year, more than 1,300 bias incidents were reported to the police in my own State of New Jersey. Countless more went unreported. In America and around the world, the politics of hate are seeing a resurgence.

We must take every step to stop this rise of ethnic, religious, and racial attacks. As we debate the problems of our country, and solutions—welfare reform, crime control, jobs—we must know that no solution can work if it does not get to the underlying hate and ignorance which we see all around us.

Let us move forward today, and begin by condemning the venom of Khalid Abdul Muhammad. Let us put this man behind us. But as we move forward, and work against the racial, religious, and ethnic discriminations of Muhammad's kind, let us never forget the sobering reminder of these remarks, and how large the job ahead of us is. We must all join hearts and hands for a brotherhood of Americans in our schools, in our neighborhoods, and in the workplace.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. NADLER].

Mr. NADLER. Mr. Speaker, in his Kean College speech, Mr. Khalid Abdul Muhammad urged racial genocide in South Africa, which has seen quite enough of that over the years, and used ugly, contemptuous language directed at lesbians and gay men and at Pope John Paul II.

But the greatest share of his venom, as is so often the case with spokesmen for the Nation of Islam, was reserved for that special favorite target: the Jews. Mr. Muhammad told his audience that Jews control the Government of the United States; that Jews are "the bloodsuckers of the black nation and the black community;" and, perhaps more chillingly, that the German Jews had brought Hitler's Holocaust on themselves. "They went in there, in Germany," Mr. Khalid explained, "the way they do everywhere they go, and they supplanted, they usurped * * * they had undermined the very fabric of society."

These remarks surely merit condemnation, and I was heartened to see, in the weeks since he made them, that they were condemned by a wide range of political, religious, and civil-rights leaders, including those of my colleagues who had the courage to speak out despite the large Nation of Islam following in their own districts.

At the same time, however, I am concerned that some of those condemnations may miss their true mark: the leader of the Nation of Islam, Minister Louis Farrakhan. We must not lose sight of the truth that Mr. Muhammad's most horrifying remarks, particularly his anti-Semitic rantings, come straight from the teachings of Minister Farrakhan himself.

It was Louis Farrakhan who, in 1985, asserted that "The Jewish lobby has a strangle-hold on Government * * *." It was Louis Farrakhan who told a college audience at Michigan State in 1990, that Jews were "sucking the blood of the black community." And it was Louis Farrakhan himself who implied that the Holocaust was a punishment the Jews had earned—and perhaps deserved again.

In a speech in Hartford, CT, in July 1992, just 19 months ago—I believe this is the first time this has been reported publicly—Louis Farrakhan said he told a group of rabbis the following:

> Instead of talking about Hitler so much, you should ask: Why did G-d permit that to happen? Was there a lesson to be learned, and have you learned it yet? Or maybe the lesson should be repeated?

Well, the entire world learned a lesson all right, and that lesson was never again to permit demagogues like Louis Farrakhan or Khalid Muhammad—or those who believe it is appropriate to imply that the leaders of African nations practice cannibalism—to go unchallenged.

Because history has taught us—in Germany and Mississippi and Crown Heights—that when decent men and women ignore expressions of bigotry and hatred, those expressions have consequences, and words become actions, and then it is too late.

It is important that all who hear this debate today—especially those who might want to find a good side to Louis Farrakhan—to understand that Mr. Muhammad may have been the messenger one night at Kean College, but it is the message of Louis Farrakhan, and the substantial following the demagogues of hate have found across our Nation, that must be the target of our condemnation.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 1 minute to my colleague, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WATT].

Mr. WATT. Mr. Speaker, as an individual I condemn the statements which are the subject of this resolution. There may be no individual in this body who has spent a greater percentage of his life fighting racism and sexism in this country. I oppose this resolution not because I condone the speech; instead, I oppose it because it opens the door to a resolution of this kind every week, in fact, every day and every minute.

We have too much substantive work to do to deal with these kinds of issues on a daily and minute-by-minute basis. We have people who are hungry, illiterate, homeless, and jobless. We have budgets to approve and world conflicts to deal with. In the face of all this, I cannot believe that we are spending time to set a precedent, to take up on a regular basis, resolutions of this kind to condemn every lunatic who expresses views we disagree with, views we happen to feel are protected by the Constitution of this United States of America, the Mother of all democracies.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. TUCKER].

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this resolution for many reasons. First and foremost is the fact that I believe we must speak out against racism.

There are those who have alluded to me that this is a first amendment matter, and that the gentleman who made these remarks has his first amendment rights to speak out even if we are not in agreement with those remarks. But by the same token, I think it is the responsibility of those of us who are well-thought and conscientious leaders of this society to exercise our first amendment rights and to speak out and to denounce such racism.

The prior speaker indicated that this Congress is certainly poised to deal with very important matters and should not take time out for some minutiae such as this. But I think that this is an important matter. It is not minutiae because the coalitions that we need in order to do things in this country between the black and Jewish communities and other communities would be jeopardized if we do not address the fact that we cannot continue to attack one another. We cannot live with one another and turn to one another until we respect one another, and certainly even Mr. Farrakhan came out and rebuked and reprimanded and repudiated his minister for these remarks.

I do not think there is any gainsaying the fact, Mr. Speaker, that these remarks were repugnant and vile. I just hope that in the future this Congress, and Senate, and the House, will take likewise the same kind of response to pernicious remarks made by other people, whether it is Senator HOLLINGS or anyone else who attacks the African-American community or other communities. I think that we should have a fair standard, a standard that is fair no matter who we are talking about.

So, Mr. Speaker, I applaud my colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. LANTOS] for making this effort, and I think this should not be a disparagement on the Nation of Islam per se but certainly a repudiation of the remarks of this particular minister.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FRANKS].

Mr. FRANKS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I represent the district where Khalid Abdul Muhammad's speech was delivered. As soon as I learned of his vicious remarks, I felt that it was incumbent upon me to speak out about his acrid and violent message of hate and bigotry.

Acts of bigotry and intolerance are on the rise throughout our country. The United States was founded with the promise that all would be welcome in our society. Our Nation is comprised of a wonderful mix of religious, ethnic, and racial groups, all of whom must work together if our union is to survive and prosper.

Mr. Muhammad's speech, in which he advocated hate, discord, and violence on the basis of race, religion, and ethnicity, serves only to foster the prejudice that is tearing at the fabric of our society. Earlier this year, I circulated a statement, signed by every member of the New Jersey delegation, condemning incidences of bias that have occurred within our State.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation is vitally important. We cannot be silent while national spokespersons preach these messages of hate. I urge my colleagues to vote "aye" on House Resolution 343.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire as to how much time there is left on both sides?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). The gentleman from California [Mr. LANTOS] has 9 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] has 18 minutes remaining.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to yield 2 minutes to my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FINGERHUT].

Mr. FINGERHUT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me, and I thank him for his leadership on this issue.

I would like to say initially to my friend, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MFUME], that if he wishes to lead an effort to change the rules such that he can speak directly on the subject of the remarks to which he addressed himself, he will have this Member's support. I find it offensive that a rule of the body in which I serve prevents him from making those statements on this floor.

Many eloquent things have been said today about the subject of the resolution offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. LANTOS]. Let me just add one thought. It is true that this resolution was prompted by the particular speech at Kean College, NJ, but it is not true that that is the only occasion on which these statements have been made, and that, therefore, by this action we call attention to a speech that is now over and has been remarked on and condemned by many all over this country. These remarks are happening every day all around this country.

The speech has been given at Kent State University in my northeast Ohio region just last week. I heard another Member say that the speech was going to be repeated at Trenton State College. It was going to be given at Columbus, OH, but that university had the presence of mind to cancel those remarks. It is happening all over this country.

The message we need to send today is that only is this speech abhorred but that we are going to follow them everywhere around the country and we are going to stand up to it everywhere these remarks occur.

Mr. Speaker, I would say to the sponsor of the resolution that during the recess I met with students from every public and private high school in my district, and I asked them what was the single thing they would like the most from their Member of Congress and from the adults in their community and from their parents, and they said to me, "Congressman, we want role models. We want people to stand up and say the difference between right and wrong."

Mr. Speaker, today we have a chance to be role models to the young people of this country, to stand up and say, "This is wrong. We know the difference between right and wrong, and everywhere wrong is spoken all over this country, we will stand up and be role models."

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, it has been properly said this afternoon that there is no excuse for hatemongering. Neither is there any excuse, Mr. Speaker, for the U.S. Congress to stand silent and not condemn expressions of racism, anti-Catholicism, anti-Semitism and ethnic and religious intolerance. That is what we are called upon to do by this resolution.

Is there a place on our society for racism, for anti-Catholic and anti-Semitic remarks? I have to say there is. It is a price we pay for constitutionally protected rights. But, Mr. Speaker, because Mr. Muhammad can speak, it is all the more important that we, the Congress of the United States, stand up and condemn those remarks.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from New York [Mrs. LOWEY].

Mrs. LOWEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to support the Lantos resolution, and to discuss a subject as painful as it is important.

Last November, Khalid Abdul Muhammad, a spokesman for the Nation of Islam gave a speech at Kean College in New Jersey. It is a speech we have heard before.

Mr. Muhammad described a nightmare; a world of enemies and conspiracies; a world of division and violence; a world divided by prejudice and bigotry.

He described the same world seen by the Klan; the same world defined by Nazi ideology. It is the sameness and familiarity that is so striking. Only the details change.

If Mr. Muhammad's particular fascination with Jews is even more disturbing, it is because blacks and Jews have always stood together in support of civil rights, equal opportunity, and concern for the underprivileged. We have always worked side by side, challenging our country to live up to its ideals. I know that my good friends in the Congressional Black Caucus, some of whom joined me last year on a trip to Israel, are every bit as outraged and pained by these statements as I am.

But our partnership will continue and grow stronger because the bonds and values that tie us together are stronger than the forces that would push us apart. Perhaps because blacks and Jews still contend with discrimination today, and with memories of even greater injustice in years gone by, we know the lesson of history: hatred, like its victims, knows no color or creed—it is a universal temptation that must be rejected, wholly and completely, at every opportunity, whatever the source.

And so, I have no doubt that, in the end, Mr. Muhammad's words will join all the others like it: the Nuremberg Laws, the Apartheid Codes, the Jim Crow Statutes. Lies can never sustain themselves, only our silence gives them substance and life.

That is why it is so important that we join together, black and white, Jew and Gentile, Protestant, Catholic and Moslem. That we join together in support of the truth.

When Martin Luther King, Jr. addressed our Nation from the steps of the Lincoln Memorial, he urged that we "not seek to satisfy our thirst for freedom by drinking from the cup of bitterness or hatred."

We should not have to learn this lesson anew every generation.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KLEIN].

Mr. KLEIN. I would like to thank my friend from California for bringing such an important issue to the floor of the House and for setting such a powerful example on the fight to protect civil rights for all people.

I find it particularly disturbing and offensive that anti-Semitism and bigotry should be on the rise again in a century that witnessed the Holocaust, the most horrific period of genocidal anti-Semitism the world has ever seen.

Yet, bias incidents and hate crimes have increased, and Congress must take a stand.

We should condemn hateful and bigoted statements, whether directed against blacks, Jews, Catholics, or any group. I am particularly disturbed that this speech occurred in my own State of New Jersey, but more so that as a result of that, there was an increase of one-third in just 1 year in bias incidents.

Now, I do not believe that the Kean College remarks represent the views of the majority of Americans. I truly believe that those who speak in the bigoted and hateful manner represent a small, albeit vocal, minority. The vast majority of Americans of all races, African-Americans, Anglo-Americans, Americans of all ethnicity, are good, caring people who believe they can work and live together in harmony.

But that does not mean that we should not be eternally vigilant, because even one incident of bigotry or anti-Semitism or racism anywhere, is a cause for condemnation and vigilance.

It is past time to erase the swastikas from our walls and smother the burning crosses on our lawns. My friends, join me in a simple condemnation of racism, anti-Catholicism, anti-Semitism, and ethnic or religious intolerance, wherever it may occur. Support H.R. 343.

Mr. HYDE. I am very pleased to yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. FRANKS].

Mr. FRANKS of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding. Mr. Speaker, when I was 9 years old, some white racists burned a cross on my front lawn. The Ku Klux Klan killed a dog on our lawn and placed a dead possum in our mailbox, simply because we dared to live in a certain section of Waterbury.

It was members of the Jewish community that helped our family during those very trying days against the racist Ku Klux Klan.

A Catholic priest at Sacred Heart High School helped me to be able to get a good high school education and helped me to be able to go on to Yale University. The remarks made by Mr. Muhammad and supported to a degree by Mr. Farrakhan were anti-white, anti-Catholic, and anti-Jewish. Yes, the Ku Klux Klan would hate blacks, Catholics, and Jews, while it seems like the Nation of Islam would hate whites, Catholics, and Jews.

Hatred and bigotry would be wrong regardless of the direction of the offense or the color of its victim. We as blacks cannot constantly point to others to explain why certain problems exist in our society. We must also look at ourselves.

I implore the Congressional Black Caucus not to utilize any of its taxpayer-supported resources aiding the efforts of the Nation of Islam. I heard from others that we have to appreciate the good done by the Nation of Islam. However, we must remember that there are thousands of people in jail today who have also done some good.

Hatred and bigotry cannot be tolerated, Mr. Speaker. Creating friction among the races is wrong. It is destructive, and it must not be condoned in any way.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Washington [Mr. INSLEE].

Mr. INSLEE. Mr. Speaker, every single one of us in this Chamber I believe detests and decries the speech that we here consider. The suffering undergone by the people who are targets of this evil is incalculable. I condemn it. But there is a world of difference between myself condemning it and the U.S. Congress condemning it. There is only one thing that can make Mr. Muhammad's racist, hate-filled, bigoted speech worse; that is if the Congress now highlights, spotlights, and headlights his worthless prattle, and, in the process, drives us to take one small step backward from our commitment to the first amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

If this institution gets into the business of condemning citizens' speech, we will be condemning constantly anybody whittling away at the first amendment.

There are many eloquent champions of the first amendment, and maybe one of my favorite is Justice William O. Douglas, born and raised in my hometown. He said something about how you lose free speech that has always stuck with me. He says when the end of free speech comes in this country, it will not come as a curtain coming down instantaneously and dramatically. It will come incrementally, as the day ends to the night, in the twilight, bit by bit, inch by inch. What we see here is one little inch moving backward.

To those who would say this resolution does not infringe on free speech because it does nothing, I ask then, why do it at all? The reason it is proposed is because the official declaration of this national institution carries weight. It carries pressure. It carries warnings.

If free speech is not constitutionally protected, we shouldn't fiddle around with this resolution. We should make it a criminal offense and put the speaker in jail, a malicious harassment speech statute, like I proposed and helped adopt in the State of Washington. We should take warning from this resolution.

The warning is that we should be prepared to see no end to these condemnations. Voices will be heard. Why do we condemn the Caucasian citizen who spouts racist rhetoric and not the other? Let us not put this institution in the position of tacitly approving everything we do not condemn. This is a bad policy, it is a bad idea. It is bad business.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Vermont [Mr. SANDERS].

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, this is a very difficult resolution for me. As it happens, virtually my father's entire family was murdered by Hitler when they were living in Poland. I have very strong feelings about anti-Catholicism or gay bashing or bigotry in general.

My concern lies, among other things, that when we have people like David Duke, a former Nazi, when we have all kinds of people in the United States ranting and raving about sending blacks back to Africa or all kinds of absurd bigotry, I do not see resolutions coming down on the floor of the House. They are ignored.

My concern also is that while virtually every Member of this body condemns the horrendous and stupid remarks that we are discussing today, I fear very much that the people who follow Mr. Muhammad or Mr. Farrakhan are not going to stay up too many nights worrying that the U.S. Congress has condemned them. In fact, I suspect that if we want to see that movement grow, probably we have given them a shot in the arm today.

To be condemned by the U.S. Congress in many communities of America is a step forward.

I think the most important point that I would make, however, is that if we are concerned, as we must be, as to why that type of movement is gaining a foothold in the United States, we should ask some questions as to why people respond to that type of garbage and what we might do about it.

If we want to defeat the Nation of Islam and bigotry and racism and anti-semitism, then most important, let us make the U.S. Congress begin to address the real problems facing the people in those communities.

My point is that in so many communities of America today, there is such hopelessness. There is such despair that people are responding to the worst kind of nonsense. If we want to defeat that anti-Semitism and that racism, then let us give hope to people in America today who have lost hope. Let us provide jobs for the jobless, housing for the homeless, food for the hungry.

Let us tell those people in those communities that the U.S. Congress can do more than just condemn certain statements, but we understand their needs. We are going to respond to their needs, and we are going to do the best that we can to improve their lives.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SANTORUM].

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. Speaker, one of the greatest needs I have encountered while discussing the issue of welfare reform with people in Pennsylvania is the need to go beyond public policy rhetoric—to address the reality of systemic and individual racism which still lingers and obstructs opportunity for reconciliation and advancement.

Unfortunately, at a time when our words should be healing and reconciling to complement and enhance the proposed public policy objectives, there are still people in prominent public roles whose words tear down and destroy.

When Khalid Muhammad refers to Jews as bloodsuckers, the Pope as a cracker and accuses the white establishment of inventing the AIDS virus to commit genocide on African-Americans, his words cause greater destruction than can be easily rebuilt. What concerns me even more, however, is the unwillingness of Louis Farrakhan to reject these statements and try to rebuild community and goodwill with his words.

The only way we are going to address the almost insurmountable problems facing our inner city communities—drug abuse, teen pregnancy, welfare dependency, and violence—is by rebuilding the community—from both inside and out. Many members of the Nation of Islam are actively trying to address these critical problems—but a community is built by both word and deed.

I support this resolution because its words, when affirmed by this body together, will be a small step toward rebuilding some of the damage caused by the statements made, and not disclaimed, by Khalid Abdul Muhammad. It is a rare opportunity to model reconciliation and community in a place known for discord and division.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ROBERTS].

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Speaker, this is one of these "I was not intending to make a speech until I heard the remarks of my colleagues' speech."

Mr. Mohammad, a top ranking official to Mr. Farrakhan, is a private citizen. He is not an elected official and in any way connected to Government. His remarks are abhorrent, but I think that his right to express them is guaranteed by the first amendment.

I think this resolution, while I understand the intent and agree with the intent, puts the Congress in the awkward position of being a screening board. And I think it would set a precedent for Congress to review all speeches, all remarks that contain any racial, sexist, or inflammatory sentiments for any kind of condemnation. I wonder if this is going to spill over into newspapers, I come to the floor as a former editor of a weekly newspaper and coming from three generations of editors of newspapers, or books or magazines. There is already an arena in place for this type of condemning action that the resolution does propose, and I credit the gentleman from California [Mr. LANTOS] for proposing it.

As elected officials, Members of Congress have the responsibility to speak out against intolerance and expressions of bigotry. We have done this. This has been the appropriate forum.

With grave concern, I think we are setting a precedent that we should not set. I will vote no.

Mr. Speaker, I really see this as a free speech issue. Mr. Muhammad, a top-ranking official to Louis Farrakhan, is a private citizen. He is not an elected official or in any way connected to the Government. As abhorrent as his remarks were, his right to express these views in a public forum are guaranteed by the first amendment.

This resolution to condemn the speech puts the Congress in the awkward position of being a type of screening board. This would set a precedent for Congress to review all speeches or remarks containing inflammatory, racial, sexist, et cetera, sentiments for condemnation. Will this then spill over into books, magazines, newspapers?

There is an arena already in place for this type of condemning action that the resolution proposes. As elected officials, Members of Congress have the responsibility to speak out against intolerance and expressions of bigotry. The appropriate forum for this type of action in Congress, in my view, is 1 minutes and special orders and individual remarks. I strongly believe Members should make their opposition to these types of intolerant remarks be known—loud and clear. But, for Congress to officially condemn the speech across constitutional lines would set a dangerous precedent.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. HORN].

Mr. HORN. Mr. Speaker, this is a very close call, if looked at strictly in terms of the role of this House—the people's House. Should Congress be the grandnanny of America?

I think most of us would say "no." On the other hand, if good people do not stand up, bad people will poison the well of our representative democracy.

As one who was part of the Senate drafting team for the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the Voting Rights Act of 1965, I remember who was often in the room besides the congressional staff and the floor leaders: Andrew Biemiller of the AFL–CIO; Clarence Mitchell of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; Joseph Rauh for the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights; David Brody of the Anti-Defamation League; James Hamilton of the National Council of Churches. Those were the people who for years had walked the Halls of the House and the Senate to secure the rights of all Americans. Black and white, Christians and Jews they worked inside to establish justice and to achieve what Martin Luther King sought so eloquently outside. They worked together in a grand coalition because what we were doing was right.

By passing this resolution will we make false heroes out of some of these sick bigots. Perhaps. Do we need to speak out once this resolution is before us?

We do.

I shall support the resolution.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SKAGGS].

Mr. SKAGGS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I am deeply troubled that we are considering this resolution to condemn the speech given by Khalid Abdul Muhammad at Kean College last November. I am troubled not because the speech does not deserve condemnation, but because that condemnation ought not to issue through an official action of the Congress of the United States.

The first amendment to the Constitution states that "Congress shall make no law * * * abridging the freedom of speech or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble * * *."

This resolution does not make law, so the first amendment proscription is not literally violated. However, because I believe that it violates the spirit and intent of what the Framers of the Constitution intended when they drafted the first amendment, I will vote no.

The Constitution is clear that it's not the Government's place to tell citizens what they should and should not say. While what we consider today is a resolution that does not have the force of law, I believe that this body should not undertake to censure any individual American for saying what he believes—however mistakenly—to be true.

The weight of what we as a body say, whether as law or the sense of the House of Representatives, is too great to selectively choose which individual's speech we want to condemn, and which we choose to ignore. There are far too many statements made every day that reach the same level of stupidity and perfidy to which Mr. Muhammad has aspired. Are we to spend all of our time as thought police monitoring what all Americans say and considering resolutions to condemn the speech of those we don't agree with or find offensive?

Mr. Muhammad's speech was a racist, anti-Semitic diatribe that I would hope all of us as individuals would condemn. But this institution has no place condemning the speech of Mr. Muhammad, or the speech of anyone else for that matter.

As Mr. Muhammad had the right to say what he did, so I urge all of my colleagues, as American citizens, to exercise their rights under the Constitution as individuals to condemn the hatred he has espoused. However, I also urge all of my colleagues, as Members of the House of Representatives, to refrain from putting the House on record in determining what speech is appropriate, and what is not, by voting no on this resolution.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, since I believe the gentleman from California [Mr. LANTOS] only has one more speaker, if I may, I am pleased to yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentlewoman from North Carolina [Mrs. CLAYTON].

Mrs. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to rise to say that I am offended and think that I should speak out against the hatred, the bigotry, and the substance of which we condemn today, but I also want to say that I think we will do ourselves a disservice, those that have spoken out against the bigotry, which we may be the victims of, to use this House as a way to correct that.

I think the Constitution is too precious, too precious to even speak our views, to speak out against those who would be offended. I think as an offended citizen who feels that this indeed has been an offense to any civilized person, we must bear in mind that the first amendment is a very precious right, and that right should be protected.

Mr. Speaker, I urge Members, when we vote, to consider the right that America is very well known for; that is a right even for our enemy to condemn us in the most hateful way. This is America. I urge Members to support the first amendment.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Speaker, let me just say in summary that one of the great remarks made when our country was founded about this body is, "Here, sir, the people govern." We represent the people. We are a representative democracy. I do believe people of America, the good, decent people we represent, are affronted and offended by the venomous attacks made on people's religion, on their ethnicity, on their race, on their color, and I think we have every right to speak out institutionally, collectively, not to forbear the legal right to say what you say, but the moral right to say what they said. Nobody has the right to insult people, the moral right. They may have the legal right. They have the legal right.

We said, "Go ahead and burn the American flag." I resisted that, but if that is symbolic speech, certainly actual speech ought to be protected, and it is protected. However, we do not have to turn the other cheek and become accessories by silence, by inaction, ratify through inaction. Scripture tells us, "For every idle word, man must render an account." It is well said that for every idle silence, man should render an account. We should not remain silent even in the face of this egregious, poisonous, venomous attack on all that is decent in our land.

Speaking for the people, I am pleased not to forbid this language being uttered, it should be uttered if somebody is crazy enough to want to do that, but to condemn the lack of decency in its uttering.

Mr. Speaker, I yield whatever time I have remaining to the gentleman from California [Mr. LANTOS].

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). The gentleman yields his remaining time to the gentleman from California [Mr. LANTOS].

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my friend and colleague, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE], for his statement and for his eloquent argument.

To close on our side, Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. SWETT].

Mr. SWETT. Mr. Speaker, I first want to commend my colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. LANTOS] for bringing this resolution to the floor. We have heard, I think, one of the most interesting debates this House has engaged in since I have been a Member of this body. We have talked about symbols: On one hand, symbols of hatred, of division, derision, violence, and disrespect; on the other hand, this resolution, a symbol that can hopefully bring us back together.

As my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] said just before me, these symbols are important and we ought to consider their moral content. I think it is important for this Congress to take upon itself the responsibility of bringing clearly to the public's attention actions that abuse the respect and the dignity of human beings and fellow citizens in this country.

We are not passing laws to perpetrate any kind of action against the Nation of Islam and its members. We have not done anything but bring attention to the Nation that these symbols of hatred, division, and derision cannot be tolerated.

In 1838, Abraham Lincoln spoke these words:

> All the armies of Europe, Asia and Africa combined, with all the treasure of the earth in their military chest; with a Bonaparte for a commander, could not by force take a drink from the Ohio or make a track on the Blue Ridge in a trial of a thousand years * * * If destruction be our lot we must ourselves be its author and finisher. As a nation of freemen we must live through all time, or die by suicide.

Mr. Speaker, if we do not stand up to these kinds of statements, if we do not make a symbol of this speech and say, "We cannot tolerate this kind of action in this country," we will surely die of suicide.

I support this resolution. I commend my colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. LANTOS], for bringing it forward, and I ask my colleagues for their unequivocal support.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, just to conclude, let me say no one in this House is more committed to the first amendment than I am. As the only Member of Congress who lived under both a Fascist and a Communist police state, I treasure free speech beyond all. No one here attempts to deny the right of anyone to speak freely, but no one should deny the right of this body to condemn a speech of hatred and incitement to mass murder. That is what this body will do. That is what the other body did unanimously. We shall do no less.

Mr. FAZIO. Madam Speaker, I rise in strong opposition to the remarks made by Khalid Muhammad, aide to Nation of Islam Minister Louis Farrakhan, at Kean College in New Jersey last November. I found Mr. Muhammad's speech completely offensive. His remarks were obviously racist, anti-Semitic, bigoted, and homophobic—truly malicious.

In spite of my agreement with the spirit and intent of House Resolution 343, I am forced to acknowledge that it is not the job of Congress to evaluate and vote on personal expressions of bigotry and racism, no matter how offensive. Unfortunately, prejudice and intolerance always manage to rear their ugly heads. Congress could therefore devote entire days reacting to, rating and responding to the words of individuals like Mr. Muhammad.

We now have a President who values the diversity that is America, and who is totally committed to our ideals of equality, justice, and acceptance of and respect for all people, regardless of race, religion, gender, sexual preference or ethnicity. I would therefore like to think that, instead of re-visiting these same issues over and over again, each generation, we can focus on moving forward with our efforts to wipe out petty prejudices and intolerance.

Under this leadership, as Members of Congress, we can live up to our responsibility to stand up, to speak, and to be counted—not for the purpose of recognizing or validating or drawing even further attention to the rantings of the Muhammads of this world—but instead for reaffirming our beliefs in what we know to be fair, right, and good. It is this way that we can silence the voice of bigotry and intolerance—that we can work toward healing old wounds and becoming the America we can and should be.

Condemning and striking out are not enough. We have to have the foresight and commitment to follow through—to take the positive steps necessary to unite in our broad-based intolerance for all prejudice, hatred, and bigotry, regardless of to whom it is directed.

I in no way wish to associate myself with any approval whatsoever of Mr. Muhammad's remarks. And I do not believe that they are worthy of legislative action. Therefore, I find myself in the position of having to abstain from voting on what is a most unfortunate issue to come before the House.

Remarks like Mr. Muhammads are offensive and detrimental to all Americans. They serve only to promote hatred and intolerance—to inflame and divide. He has more than benefitted from the notoriety and visibility that we have already lavished on him. Neither his statement nor its author merit further time or attention from this body. We therefore need to move quickly and decisively, get him out of the spotlight, and put this issue behind us so that we can get on with the more important, relevant business of working together to run the country

Mr. FILNER. Mr. Speaker, when I came to Congress, I decided I was always going to vote my conscience.

As a Jew and a civil rights activist, I was sickened at the remarks of Khalid Abdul Muhammad. His litany of hate offends me deeply.

But as a Member of the U.S. Congress—an institution that is bound to preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution—I cannot in good conscience vote for an official congressional joint resolution restricting Mr. Muhammad's freedom of speech, as given to him by the first amendment. As a body of government, we must uphold the rights of all individuals, whether or not we agree with their stated beliefs.

I have condemned Mr. Muhammad's viciousness against Catholics, blacks, gays and lesbians, and Jews—and I do so again today. Our future as a nation lies in our celebration of diversity and our burying forever the evils of racism and anti-Semitism.

As a Member of Congress, I am sworn to protect the Constitution—a Constitution which has preserved our freedom and liberty for 200 years. Freedom of speech—no matter how abhorrent—is one of the bulwarks of our constitutional liberties. And Congress "shall make no law abridging the freedom of speech!"

Today we can condemn the vile remarks of Mr. Muhammad. But my question is, who will be next? Does a majority decide at any point what speech is abhorrent? That is exactly what the first amendment is all about—to protect us from going down this slippery slope. I vote today to protect that right!

Together, we can build a nation strong enough to withstand the racism of Mr. Muhammad. What our Nation cannot survive is the slow erosion of our basic freedoms.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, I have asked the sponsors of this resolution if there is any precedent in this Congress for condemning an American for statements he has made. Neither Mr. LANTOS nor Mr. HYDE can recall such a condemnation ever having been made in the history of this House.

Make no mistake, the statement of this extremist was reprehensible. His bigotry extended not only to Jewish-Americans but also to Catholic-Americans such as myself. His words truly represent outrageous hatemongering of the most vicious and violent nature.

As an American, I condemn the statement of Khalid Abdul Muhammad. However, I recognize his right to speak these awful words under the protection of the Constitution which I have sworn to uphold—even when the exercise of one's constitutional rights offends me deeply.

If the job of Congress is to condemn irresponsible speeches in America, then we have taken on a monumental task. We cannot stop with this speech in New Jersey nor with the rally recently organized by the Ku Klux Klan in my hometown of Springfield. To be consistent, we must monitor all speeches for these excesses.

This resolution, which sets a precedent for Government action against such outrageous speech, is a mistake. Let us spend our time attacking the causes of all bigotry in America and not attacking words of hatred, however painful they may be.

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of House Resolution 343, condemning the remarks by Khalid Abdul Muhammad at Kean College in late November. I want to commend my colleague, Mr. LANTOS, for bringing this matter to the floor. All of us in this body recognize his strong record on human rights and defense of the oppressed. As a survivor of the Holocaust, Representative LANTOS knows the depth of suffering and how critical it is to denounce this type of bigoted speech anywhere and anytime.

Mr. Speaker, I recently had an occasion to speak on this subject before the Cleveland Chapter of the American Jewish Congress. In addressing this matter, I issued the following statement, which I would like inserted into the RECORD. I intend to vote in favor of this resolution and ask that my colleagues join in condemning these evil and vicious remarks.

CONGRESSMAN STOKES RESPONDS TO FARRAKHAN CONTROVERSY

Last year Rabbi Kamin and I wrote an oped piece which was published in the Cleveland Plain Dealer. The article was entitled, "Blacks and Jews Can Renew Their Old Alliance." In the article, we stated. "The personal and spiritual cooperation between blacks and Jews was a foundation of the nonviolent freedom movement of a generation ago, and in drawing from both communities, this unity symbolized the finest of American traditions." In that same article, we referred to what we described as "the rising flag of bigotry in America."

Fitting into this category is the recent speech made by Mr. Khalid Abdul Muhammad at Kean College in New Jersey. His remarks on this occasion were, as described by Congressman Kweisi Mfume, who spoke on behalf of the Congressional Black Caucus, "evil and vicious." More specifically, he described his remarks as "racist, sexist, antisemitic, anti-Catholic and homophobic."

I agree fully with that statement. I find Mr. Muhammad's words repugnant and antithetical to everything I believe in. As one who has dedicated his life to fighting racism and bigotry in any form in this country or wherever it exists, I found his speech obscene.

Now there exists some public misperception regarding a so-called "covenant" between the Congressional Black Caucus and the Nation of Islam. No such covenant exists nor has it ever existed.

During the Congressional Black Caucus Weekend, Chairman Kweisi Mfume, in an effort to reach out to the Nation of Islam to find ways to save youth from crime, drugs and violence, stated that we were establishing a "covenant" with the Nation of Islam. In a press conference this past week in Washington, DC, he confirmed the fact that there had never been a meeting of the Congressional Black Caucus to discuss the establishment of such a "covenant" and that represented his own effort to "reach out."

Minister Louis Farrakhan described his aide, Khalid Abdul Muhammad's speech as "vile and repugnant." Farrakhan has also called for a closed door summit of black leaders. There has been no discussion of such a meeting by members of the Congressional Black Caucus. There are many of us who have reservations about such a meeting and would not meet with him until he has openly and clearly disavowed his anti-semitic inferences and statements.

Lastly, we must continue to expose all who espouse hate in our society, but we must also get past the rhetoric and get to the real problems.

In an editorial in today's Washington Post (February 7, 1994) entitled, "The Farrakhan Furor," it says, "Finally, it is all too easy for white Americans to see and cite obligations for African-American leaders without understanding that these are their own obligations as well. We are speaking here not only of a duty to condemn comparable hateful talk when it is perpetrated by one of their own, but also of shared responsibility for creating an environment in which messages of scapegoating and spite cannot find resonance. Black and white leaders and citizens alike need to reject the diverting hatred. But that, in a way, may be the easier part. They must also pursue the essential purpose of eliminating the conditions in which such hatred can flourish."

Mr. GALLO. Mr. Speaker, my State prides itself on being the Garden State, but no one should make the mistake of thinking that it provides fertile ground for the kind of vile hatemongering that Khalid Abdul Muhammad has attempted to plant in New Jersey.

I commend the House for acting today to add its voice of condemnation to that of public officials in New Jersey, which include Governor Whitman and the bipartisan membership of the New Jersey congressional delegation.

Those of us from New Jersey, who had this venom spewn forth on our own soil, know that hate-filled diatribes like this must be met head on by men and women everywhere who believe in loving thy neighbor.

The only way America can hope to be true to the words of our founding document, "that all men are created equal," is to forcefully condemn the words and actions of those who seek to divide us, driven by bigotry, ignorance, hatred, and intolerance.

Thank you.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, I abhor the statement of Khalid Abdul Muhammad with every sense of outrage I possess. Let there be no mistake about that. Mr. Muhammad is a private citizen and is not a prominent individual. We should individually express our displeasure, horror, outrage, and shock at the sentiments Mr. Muhammad purveyed, but he is not an elected official or associated with Government. We cannot, the Congress cannot, be a screening board for the purpose of approving or disapproving the sentiments expressed by private citizens. As an individual Congressman I strongly personally repudiate the sentiments of Khalid Abdul Muhammad which are the subject of House Resolution 343.

Ms. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I was not able to participate in the debate today on House Resolution 343—a resolution to condemn the bigoted speech given by Khalid Abdul Muhammad at Kean College on November 29, 1993. In a letter I sent to my constituents, I wrote that—

> I bring my view that all bigotry is the same from my own experiences growing up in segregated Washington, my work as a young person in the civil rights movement, and my professional life as a civil rights lawyer, former Chair of the New York City Human Rights Committee and former Chair of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. I remain a disciple of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. and wish more than ever for his leadership. The bigotry and insensitivity to groups other than one's own that we have seen in recent years are a challenge to me and to others to help revive King's teachings, and my own lifelong personal commitment as well, that anti-Semitism and bigotry of all kinds against religious and ethnic groups must be exposed and expunged.

I would like to place in the RECORD today remarks I made upon receiving the 1994 Civil Rights Leadership Award at the Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. Commemorative Observance at the Embassy of Israel on January 27, 1994.

> I accept with appreciation this civil rights leadership award at this special moment that cries out for civil rights leadership.
> The experience of being black in America has taught most of us how to respond when African Americans, the traditional and continuing targets of bigotry, are attacked or when there is even a whisper of insensitivity toward race. But too many have lost their voices or worse, engaged in apologias, when the targets were not ourselves.
> What is at stake is not the moral authority black people have historically brought to the great moral and human rights issues of the time. Too much of that authority has already been squandered in the failure to adequately communicate the indivisibility and reciprocity of human and civil rights. The traditional moral authority of the civil rights movement has not been entirely preserved. It must now be entirely reclaimed.
> It is African Americans who have set such high standards for judging bigotry and prejudice. No wonder others insist upon holding us to those standards. We cannot continue to allow large audiences in arenas and most of all on college campuses to hear unrebutted, raw bigotry of the kind that turned our stomachs when analogous stereotypes were spoken of blacks and galvanized the civil rights movement in the first place.
> There is special, tragic irony in anti-semitism in the black community in particular. American Jews have always been first in line for human rights in general and black civil rights in particular. How perverse it is to single out for bigoted references those who have always been our foremost allies in every step toward freedom that we have taken and in the legislation brought forward every day by the Congressional Black Caucus. Whether the words are casual references that remark on Jews or Catholics or others or whether they are plainly ignorant conspiracy theories, they need strong but careful rebuttal and thoughtful teaching.
> This is moral leadership that must be taken on with care. It is not sufficient to repudiate antisemitism. We must go further. We must take a leaf from the teachings of Martin Luther King, Jr. Without contributing to existing polarization, he found ways to approach with compassion those who hated blacks. In the same spirit, Black leadership must find constructive but candid, unadorned ways to reach those among us whose words betray their own lofty and principled heritage.
> In the name of that heritage, in the name of the great American civil rights movement that has always insisted that human rights is a universal principle judged by one and only one standard, I accept today's award as a worthy and urgent challenge.

Mrs. UNSOELD. Mr. Speaker, I joined with a minority of my colleagues in voting against House Resolution 343, a resolution to condemn the bigoted speech given by Khalid Abdul Muhammad at Kean College this past November. Few of the votes I have cast while serving in this body have been more troubling than this one.

Mr. Muhammad's speech was one of the most venomous, hate-filled diatribes I have ever read. As a long-time supporter of Israel, I was especially nauseated by the speech's anti-Semitic content. In addition, it attacked women, Catholics, gays, and lesbians all in language seemingly intended to stir the most vile emotions. Perhaps even more disturbing than the speech was the enthusiastic reception it received from the young, impressionable audience. It is indeed incumbent upon all Members of this body to loudly condemn such poison and do all we can to ensure that all who hear Mr. Muhammad's message have the knowledge and wisdom to see that his message is rejected.

However, as abhorrent as were Mr. Muhammad's remarks, I could not bring myself to support this resolution. As disgusting as his comments were, his right to free speech is protected by our Constitution.

My friends in the Jewish community have often told me of their efforts to fight hate while protecting the rights guaranteed to each and every American in the Constitution. They, like I was yesterday, are often confronted with the difficult dilemma of whether to safeguard the constitutional rights of despicable bigots or limit the claims of these hateful few from the protections given all Americans. To limit the rights of some is the beginning of the erosion of the rights of all. As vile and repulsive as Mr. Muhammad's ideas are, unfortunately, they fall into the category of protected speech.

While this resolution does not make law, I fear that it violates the principle and spirit of the first amendment. Our Nation's founders never thought that Government should be passing judgment on the speech of its citizens, however heinous those comments might be. The Congress must never take lightly its mandate to shield all citizens, whether we like them or not, from the tyranny which they themselves may espouse. This body should not put itself in such a position, but I fear that is what we have done with this resolution.

This is not to say that we should let such malevolent talk occur without condemnation. Elie Wiesel once said that "Indifference is the epitome of evil." To permit Mr. Muhammad's speech to pass unnoticed would provide fertile ground for the seed of his hate to grow.

As an American who believes deeply in the principles upon which this country was founded, I denounce Mr. Muhammad's diatribe and urge all Americans to reject his loathsome ideas. Those of us in the Congress must individually use our positions to condemn such divisive and revolting comments. However, our institution cannot afford to give in to the passions released by such hate-filled speech, and collectively pass judgment as a Government as to what speech to condemn, and which to not.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I rise to denounce the repugnant statements made by Khalid Abdul Mohammad of the Nation of Islam. The resolution we will approve today correctly condemns these vile statements as racist, anti-Catholic and anti-Semitic. I commend Mr. LANTOS, the author of this resolution and himself a victim of the Nazi Holocaust, for bringing this before the House of Representatives.

Last year we witnessed a great moment in our country's history, the opening of the Holocaust Museum in Washington, DC. This museum is dedicated to the memory of those who died in the Nazi Holocaust, which remains a living memory for millions of Americans, and especially Jewish-Americans. On one of the museum's walls is inscribed a reminder of the danger of silence in the face of outrageous lies. It bears repeating:

> First they came for the socialists, and I did not speak out—because I was not a socialist.
> Then they came for the trade-unionists, and I did not speak out—because I was not a trade-unionist.
> Then they came for the Jews, and I did not speak out—because I was not a Jew.
> Then they came for me—and there was no one left to speak for me.—Reverend Martin Niemoller, 1937.

All who value truth understand that the Holocaust was born of racist and bigoted thoughts. Those who wrongly believe there is merit in comments such as Mr. Mohammad's fail to recognize our resolve to state the truth, again and again. We have not forgotten the lessons of our century.

Let this be our challenge—to vocally oppose those who cast lies as truth. Today we speak for our country in condemning false charges based not on fact, but on hatred alone. This challenge demands our eternal vigilance, a duty from which we as Americans must never shrink.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All time has expired.

Pursuant to the order of the House of Tuesday, February 22, 1994, the previous question is ordered on the resolution.

The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 361, nays 34, answered "present" 29, not voting 9, as follows:

TITLE I—NATIONAL EDUCATION GOALS

SEC. 101. PURPOSE.

SEC. 102. NATIONAL EDUCATION GOALS.

The Congress declares the National Education Goals are as follows:

(1) SCHOOL READINESS.—

(A) GOAL.—By the year 2000, all children in America will start school ready to learn.

(B) OBJECTIVES.—The objectives for the goal described in subparagraph (A) are that—

(i) all children, including disadvantaged and disabled children, will have access to high-quality and developmentally appropriate preschool programs that help prepare children for school;

(ii) every parent in the United States will be a child's first teacher and devote time each day to helping such parent's preschool child learn, and parents will have access to the training and support parents need; and

(iii) children will receive the nutrition, physical activity experiences, and health care needed to arrive at school with healthy minds and bodies, and the number of low-birthweight babies will be significantly reduced through enhanced prenatal health systems.

(2) SCHOOL COMPLETION.—

(A) GOAL.—By the year 2000, the high school graduation rate will increase to at least 90 percent.

(B) OBJECTIVES.—The objectives for the goal described in subparagraph (A) are that—

(i) the Nation must dramatically reduce its high school dropout rate, and 75 percent of high school students who do drop out of school will successfully complete a high school degree or its equivalent; and

(ii) the gap in high school graduation rates between United States students from minority backgrounds and their nonminority counterparts will be eliminated.

(3) STUDENT ACHIEVEMENT AND CITIZENSHIP.—

(A) GOAL.—By the year 2000, United States students will leave grades 4, 8, and 12 having demonstrated competency over challenging subject matter including English, mathematics, science, foreign languages, civics and government, economics, arts, history, and geography, and every school in the United States will ensure that all students learn to use their minds well, so students may be prepared for responsible citizenship, further learning, and productive employment in our Nation's modern economy.

(B) OBJECTIVES.—The objectives for the goal described in subparagraph (A) are that—

(i) the academic performance of elementary and secondary students will increase significantly in every quartile, and the distribution of minority students in each quartile will more closely reflect the student population as a whole;

(ii) the percentage of students who demonstrate the ability to reason, solve problems, apply knowledge, and write and communicate effectively will increase substantially;

(iii) all students will be involved in activities that promote and demonstrate good citizenship, good health, community service, and personal responsibility;

(2) this funding shortfall is particularly burdensome to school districts and schools in low-income areas which serve higher than average proportions of students with disabilities and have fewer local resources to contribute; and

(3) it would cost the Federal Government approximately $10,000,000,000 each year to fully fund the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act.

(b) It is the sense of the Senate that the Federal Government should provide States and communities with adequate resources under the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act as soon as reasonably possible, through the reallocation of funds within the current budget monetary constraints.

SEC. 412. CONTENT AND PERFORMANCE STANDARDS.

It is the sense of the Senate that because high academic standards are the key to excellence for all students and a focus on results is an important direction for education reform, it is the sense of the Senate that States should develop their own content and performance standards in academic subject areas as an essential part of their State reform plan.

SEC. 413. STATE-SPONSORED HIGHER EDUCATION TRUST FUND SAVINGS PLAN.

TITLE II—EDUCATIONAL RESEARCH, DEVELOPMENT, AND DISSEMINATION EXCELLENCE ACT

SEC. 201. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds as follows with respect to improving education in the United States:

(1) A majority of public schools in the United States are failing to adequately prepare their students. To achieve the national education goals set forth by the President and the governors of the States, an overwhelming campaign for educational improvement must be mounted in order to set in motion many strategies and models designed to encourage and support school restructuring. The Federal Government must support an extensive program of educational research, development, dissemination, replication and assistance to identify and support the best responses for the challenges ahead. A significant investment in attaining a deeper understanding of the processes of learning and schooling and developing new ideas holds the best hope of making a substantial difference to the lives of every school and student in the United States. The Office of Educational Research and Improvement of the Department of Education should be at the center of this campaign in order to coordinate such efforts.

(2) The Federal role in educational research has been closely identified with youths who are socioeconomically disadvantaged, belong to a language minority, or are disabled. However, in 1988, the Federal commitment to education was sufficient to serve not more than—

(A) 1 out of every 5 low-income children in need of preschool education;

(B) 2 out of every 5 children in need of remediation;

(C) 1 out of every 4 children in need of bilingual education; and

(D) 1 out of every 20 youths in need of job training.

(3) The failure of the Federal Government to adequately invest in educational research and development has denied the Nation a sound foundation on which to design school improvements, leading to a history of faddism and failed experimentation resulting in a dearth of research in the area of educationally at-risk students. This situation is of particular concern because at least half of the public school students in 25 of the largest cities of the United States are minority children, and demographers project that, by 2005, almost all urban public school students will be minority children or other children in poverty.

(4) The investment goal of the Federal research, development, and dissemination function should be at least 1 percent of the total amount of funds spent on education nationally.

(5) Nationwide model programs and reliable interventions should be demonstrated and replicated, and for such purposes, programs should be established to conduct research and evaluations, and to disseminate information.

(6) The Office of Educational Research and Improvement must develop a national dissemination policy that will advance the goal of placing a national treasure chest of research results, models, and materials at the disposal of the Nation's education decisionmakers.

(7) A National Educational Research Policy and Priorities Board should be established to ensure that an educational research and dissemination agenda is developed and implemented without partisan political interference.

(8) Existing research and development entities should adopt expanded, proactive roles and new institutions must be created to promote knowledge development necessary to accelerate the application of research knowledge to high priority areas.

(9) Greater use should be made of existing technologies in efforts to improve the Nation's educational system, including efforts to disseminate research findings.

(10) Minority educational researchers are inadequately represented throughout the Department of Education, but particularly in the Office of Educational Research and Improvement. The Office therefore must assume a leadership position in the recruitment, retention, and promotion of qualified minority educational researchers.

(11) The coordination of the mission of the Office of Educational Research and Improvement with that of other components of the Department of Education is critical. It must improve the coordination of the educational research, development, and dissemination function with those of other Federal agencies.

"(A) the purposes and scope of the proposed action are consistent with the Research Priorities Plan; and

"(B) the methodology and approach of the proposed action are sound and adequate to achieve its stated objectives.

"(5) HISTORICALLY UNDERUTILIZED RESEARCHERS AND INSTITUTIONS.—The Assistant Secretary shall establish and maintain initiatives and programs to increase the participation in the activities of each Institute of groups of researchers and institutions that have been historically underutilized in Federal educational research activities, including—

"(A) researchers who are women, African-American, Hispanic, American Indian and Alaska Native, or other ethnic minorities;

"(C) may accept voluntary and uncompensated services; and

"(D) may accept unconditional gifts made to the Office to support its activities.

"(d) NATIONAL INSTITUTE FOR THE EDUCATION OF AT-RISK STUDENTS.—

"(1) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds as follows:

"(A) The rate of decline in our urban schools is escalating at a rapid pace. Student performance in most inner city schools grows worse each year. At least half of all students entering ninth grade fail to graduate 4 years later and many more students from high-poverty backgrounds leave school with skills that are inadequate for today's workplace. In 1988 the average National Assessment of Educational Progress (NAEP) reading score of white 17 year-olds was approximately 20 points higher than that of African-American 17 year-olds and 25 points higher than that of Hispanic 17 year-olds. None of the existing Federal educational research and development programs are adequately addressing this obvious emergency.

"(B) Rural schools enroll a disproportionately large share of the Nation's poor and at-risk students and yet often lack the means to address effectively the needs of these children. Intensive efforts must be made to overcome the problems of geographic isolation, declining population, inadequate financial resources and other impediments to the educational success of children residing in rural areas.

"(C) By the year 2000, an estimated 3.4 million school age children with limited English language proficiency will be entering the school system. The Federal Government must develop effective policies and programs to address the educational needs of this growing population of children who are at increased risk for educational failure.

"(D) An educational emergency exists in those urban and rural areas where there are large concentrations of children who live in poverty. The numbers of educationally disadvantaged children will substantially increase by the year 2020, when the number of impoverished children alone will be 16.5 million, a 33 percent increase over the 12.4 million children in poverty in 1987.

"(E) American Indian and Alaska Native students are keenly at-risk of educational failure, with demonstrated high dropout, illiteracy and poverty rates, and cultural, linguistic, social and geographic isolation. The estimated 400,000 Indian and Alaska Native student population from over 500 Indian and Alaska Native tribes, is small and scattered throughout remote reservations and villages in 32 States, and in off-reservation rural and urban communities where Indians constitute but a small percentage of public school student bodies. To meaningfully address the special educational needs of this historically under-served population, the existing research and development system must be opened to Indian and Alaska Native people to identify needs and design ways to address such needs.

"(F) Minority scholars as well as institutions and groups that have been historically committed to the improvement of the education of at-risk students need to be more fully mobilized in the effort to develop a new generation of programs, models, practices, and schools capable of responding to the urgent needs of students who are educationally at-risk.

"(2) PURPOSE.—It shall be the purpose of the Institute for the Education of At-Risk Students to carry out a coordinated and comprehensive program of research and development to provide nonpartisan, research-based leadership to the Nation as it seeks to improve educational opportunities for students who are at-risk for educational failure, particularly children who reside in inner city and rural areas, and on Indian reservations, and children of limited English proficiency. Such program shall—

"(A) undertake research necessary to provide a sound basis from which to identify, develop, evaluate, and assist others to replicate and adapt interventions, programs, and models which promote greater achievement and educational success by at-risk students, such as—

"(i) methods of instruction and educational practices (including community services) which improve the achievement and retention of at-risk students;

"(ii) means by which parents and community resources and institutions (including cultural institutions) can be utilized to support and improve the achievement of at-risk students;

"(iii) the training of teachers and other educational professionals and paraprofessionals to work more effectively with at-risk students;

"(iv) the most effective uses of technology in the education of at-risk students;

"(v) programs designed to promote gender equity in schools that serve at-risk students; and

"(vi) methods of assessing the achievement of students which are sensitive to cultural differences, provide multiple methods of assessing student learning, support student acquisition of higher order capabilities, and enable identification of the effects of inequalities in the resources available to support the learning of children throughout the Nation; and

"(B) maximize the participation of those schools and institutions of higher education that serve the greatest number of at-risk students in inner city and rural areas, and on Indian reservations, including model collaborative programs between schools and school systems, institutions of higher education, cultural institutions, and community organizations.

"(3) COMPREHENSIVE RESEARCH PROGRAM.—The Institute shall support a diverse and comprehensive program of research and development which shall include research related to the educational needs of—

"(A) at-risk students who reside in urban areas;

"(B) at-risk students who reside in rural areas;

"(C) children with limited English language proficiency; and

"(D) Indian and Alaska Native students.

"(4) CONSULTATION WITH INDIAN AND ALASKA NATIVE EDUCATORS.—All research and development activities supported by the Institute which relate to the education of Indian and Alaska Native students shall be developed in close consultation with Indian and Alaska Native researchers and educators, tribally controlled community colleges, tribal departments of education, and others with expertise in the needs of Indian and Native Alaska students.

"(e) NATIONAL INSTITUTE FOR INNOVATION IN EDUCATIONAL GOVERNANCE, FINANCE, POLICY-MAKING, AND MANAGEMENT.—

"(1) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds as follows:

"(A) Many elementary and secondary schools in the United States—

"(i) are structured according to models that are ineffective and rely on notions of management and governance that may be outdated or insufficient for the challenges of the next century; and

"(ii) are unsuccessful in equipping all students with the knowledge and skills needed to succeed as citizens and in the working world.

"(B) New approaches are needed in the governance and management of elementary and secondary education with the United States at the State, local, school building and classroom level.

"(C) Not enough is known about the effects of various systems of school governance and management on student achievement to provide sound guidance to policymakers as they pursue school restructuring and reform.

"(D) A concentrated Federal effort is needed to support research, development, demonstration, and evaluation of approaches to school governance, finance and management which promise to improve education equity and excellence throughout the Nation.

"(2) PURPOSE.—It shall be the purpose of the National Institute on Innovation in Educational Governance, Finance, Policy-Making, and Management to carry out a coordinated and comprehensive program of research and development to provide nonpartisan, research-based leadership to the Nation as it seeks to improve student achievement through school restructuring and reform. Such program shall—

"(A) undertake research necessary to provide a sound basis from which to identify, develop and evaluate approaches in governance, finance, policy-making, and management at the State, local, tribal, school building and classroom level which promise to improve educational equity and excellence, such as—

"(i) open enrollment programs, magnet schools and other systems through which parents may select the public schools and educational programs in which their children are enrolled;

"(ii) innovative school design, including lengthening the school day and the school year, reducing class size and building professional development into the weekly school schedule;

"(iv) effective ways of grouping students for learning so that a student is not labeled or stigmatized in ways that may impede such student's achievement;

"(v) effective approaches to organizing, structuring, and financing vocational education;

"(vi) the provision of financial and other rewards and incentives based on performance to improve student achievement;

"(vii) the use of regulatory flexibility on the State or district level to promote innovation and school restructuring;

"(viii) school-based management;

"(ix) the restructuring of school finance systems at the State and local level to promote greater equity in the distribution of resources for education and to maximize the allocation of such resources to support direct learning;

"(x) expanding the role of teachers in policymaking and administration at the school and district-wide level;

"(xi) programs designed to increase the involvement of parents and families in the management and governance of schools and the education of their children;

"(xii) effective approaches to increasing the representation of women and minorities among leadership and management positions in education;

"(xiii) approaches to systemic reforms involving the coordination of multiple policies of each level of government to promote higher levels of student achievement;

"(xiv) approaches to coordinated services for children; and

"(xv) policies related to school to work transitions and preparing noncollege-bound students; and

"(B) undertake research and development activities necessary to provide information on the skills required for successful educational leadership at the State, tribal, and local level and to enhance the ability of school leaders and administrators to improve the educational environment for all students.

"(3) RESEARCH ON EDUCATIONAL CHOICE.—In carrying out the duties of the Institute, the Assistant Secretary shall conduct or support research on whether and to what extent the quality of education in the United States would be improved by providing public funds to parents for the costs of attendance of their children at the elementary and secondary schools of the parents' choice.

"(f) NATIONAL INSTITUTE FOR EARLY CHILDHOOD DEVELOPMENT AND EDUCATION.—

"(1) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds as follows:

"(A) The Nation has set as a goal that all children should arrive at school ready to learn.

"(B) Despite efforts to expand and improve preschool programs, many children still reach school age unprepared to benefit from formal education programs.

"(C) Early intervention for disadvantaged children from conception to age five has been shown to be a highly cost-effective strategy for reducing later expenditures on a wide variety of health, developmental, and educational problems that often interfere with learning. Long-term studies of the benefits of preschool education have a demonstrated return on investment ranging from three to six dollars for every one dollar spent.

"(D) The Federal government should play a central role in providing research-based information on early childhood education models which enhance children's development and ultimately their success in school.

"(2) PURPOSE.—The purpose of the National Institute for Early Childhood Development and Education is to carry out a comprehensive program of research and development to provide nonpartisan, research-based leadership to the Nation as it seeks to improve early childhood development and education. Such program shall identify, develop, evaluate, and assist others to replicate sound policies and practices that may include—

"(A) social and educational development of all infants, toddlers, and preschool children;

"(B) the role of parents and the community in promoting the successful social and educational development of children from birth to age five;

"(C) training and preparation of teachers and other professional and paraprofessional preschool and child care workers;

"(D) the structure and environment of early childhood education and child care settings which lead to improved social and educational development;

"(E) practices and approaches which sustain the benefits of effective preschool and child care programs;

"(F) effective learning methods and curriculum for early childhood learning, including access to current materials in libraries;

"(G) the importance of family literacy and parental involvement in student learning;

"(H) the impact that outside influences have on learning, including television, and drug and alcohol abuse; and

"(I) methods for integrating learning in settings other than the classroom, such as within families and communities, with a special emphasis on character development and the value of hard work.

"(3) CERTAIN REQUIREMENTS.—In carrying out the activities of the Institute, the Assistant Secretary shall—

"(A) place special emphasis on the special early childhood education needs of at-risk children, children with disabilities, and girls; and

"(B) ensure that its research and development program provides information that can be utilized in improving the major Federal early childhood education programs, including Head Start, Even Start, chapter 1 preschool programs, and part H of the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act, and Bureau of Indian Affairs early childhood development programs.

"(g) NATIONAL INSTITUTE ON STUDENT ACHIEVEMENT.—

"(1) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds as follows:

"(A) The current achievement levels of students in the Nation are far below those that might indicate competency in challenging subject matter in English, mathematics, science, history, and geography and other areas, or across the subject areas.

"(B) Very few students demonstrate that they can use their minds well. In recent assessments, more students are gaining basic skills, yet fewer are demonstrating a grasp of higher-level applications of those skills.

"(C) During the past 20 years, relatively little has changed in how students are taught. Despite much research suggesting better alternatives, classrooms are still dominated by textbooks, teacher lectures, and short-answer activity sheets and unequal patterns of student attention.

"(D) Despite progress in narrowing the gaps, the differences in performance between white students and their minority counterparts remain unacceptably large. While progress has been made in reducing the gender gap in mathematics, it still remains at higher levels of problem solving. Too little progress has been made in reducing gender performance gaps favoring males in science and females in writing.

"(2) PURPOSE.—The purpose of the National Institute on Student Achievement is to carry out a coordinated and comprehensive program of research and development to provide research-based leadership to the Nation as it seeks to improve student achievement in English, mathematics, science, history, geography, and other subject areas and across the boundaries of the subject areas. Such program shall—

"(A) identify, develop, and evaluate innovative and exemplary methods to improve student knowledge at all levels in English, mathematics, science, history, geography, civics and government, foreign languages, arts and humanities, economics, and other subject areas, such as—

"(i) student learning and assessment in various subject matters;

"(ii) the effects of organizational patterns on the delivery of instruction, including issues of grouping and tracking, ungraded classrooms, and on the effects of various pedagogies, including the issues of technology in education;

"(iii) the best methods of teacher preparation;

"(iv) methods to improve the process of reading, the craft of writing, the growth of reasoning skills, and the development of information-finding skills;

"(v) enabling students to develop higher order thinking skills;

"(vi) methods to teach effectively all students in mixed-ability classrooms;

"(vii) curriculum, instruction, and assessment, in vocational education;

"(viii) the impact and effectiveness of Federal, State, and local efforts to provide gender-fair educational opportunities to elementary and secondary students; and

"(ix) programs, policies, approaches which promote gender equity in elementary and secondary education;

"(B) conduct basic and applied research in the areas of human learning, cognition, and performance, including research and development on the education contexts which promote excellence in learning and instruction, and motivational issues which provide a key to learning;

"(C) identify, develop, and evaluate programs designed to enhance academic achievement and narrow racial and gender performance gaps in a variety of subject areas, including research and development on methods of involving parents in their children's education and ways to involve business, industry and other community partners in promoting excellence in schools; and

"(D) include a comprehensive, coordinated program of research and development in the area of assessment which—

"(i) addresses such issues as—

"(I) the validity, reliability, generalizability, fairness, costs, relative merits, and most appropriate uses of various approaches and methods of assessing student learning and achievement;

"(II) methods and approaches to assessing student opportunities to learn (including the quality of instruction and the availability of resources necessary to support learning) and evaluating the quality of school environment;

"(III) the design, development, evaluation, and validation of model performance-based and other alternative or innovative formats or uses of assessments;

"(IV) the impact of high-stakes uses of assessment on student performance and motivation, narrowing of curriculum, teaching practices, and test integrity;

"(V) the fairness and impact of various methods of assessment on children of different races, ethnicities, gender, socioeconomic status, English language proficiencies, and children with other special needs;

"(VI) standards of performance, quality, and validity for various methods of assessment and the means by which such standards should be developed;

"(VII) current and emerging testing practices of State and local education agencies within the United States, as well as other nations;

"(VIII) the diverse effects, both intended and unintended, of assessments as actually used in the schools, including effects on curriculum and instruction, effects on equity in the allocation of resources and opportunities, effects on equity of outcomes, effects on other procedures and standards for judging students and practitioners and possible inflation of test scores;

"(IX) identifying and evaluating how students with limited English language proficiency and students with disabilities are included and accommodated in the various assessment programs of State and local education agencies; and

"(X) the feasibility and validity of comparing or equating the results of different assessments;

"(ii) reflects recommendations made by the National Education Goals Panel (provided such panel has been authorized by law);

"(iii) complies with the 'Standards for Educational and Psychological Tests' developed by the American Psychological Association, the National Council on Measurement in Education, and the American Educational Research Association;

"(iv) is consistent with the 'Criteria for Evaluation of Student Assessment Systems' developed by the National Forum on Assessment; and

"(v) complies with the 'Code of Fair Testing Practices in Education' developed by the Joint Committee on Testing Practices.

For purposes of this subparagraph, the term 'development' means the development of prototypes for the purposes of research and evaluation.

"(h) NATIONAL INSTITUTE FOR POSTSECONDARY EDUCATION, LIBRARIES, AND LIFELONG LEARNING.—

"(1) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds as follows:

"(A) The American system of postsecondary education is foremost in the world in its achievement of both academic excellence and equity in access, but maintaining that preeminence requires renewed efforts to strengthen the quality of postsecondary education. Disappointing student performance on achievement tests and licensure examinations, declining rates of persistence and completion among minorities, and other troubling trends in the quality of postsecondary education must be addressed by the Nation as part of its overall drive to improve American education.

"(B) The need to improve our Nation's economic productivity to meet the competitive challenges of a new, international economy, coupled with high levels of mobility in the United States labor market and demographic changes in the workforce, now demands more and higher quality programs of learning and training in the American workplace.

"(C) The more than 1,000,000 men and women incarcerated in the Nation's prisons and jails are among the most severely educationally disadvantaged in the United States, with high rates of functional illiteracy and extremely low levels of educational attainment. Since an estimated 90 percent of these individuals are expected to be released by the end of the decade, the Nation must act to assure that our correctional system has the means to equip these Americans with the knowledge and skills they will need to participate productively in our society.

“(D) The development of a ‘Nation of Students’ capable of and committed to the pursuit of formal and informal lifelong learning is essential to sustain both national and individual economic success and to provide a nurturing environment in which all children and youth can learn and achieve. Historically the most effective community resource for lifelong learning, the Nation's public library system must expand and restructure its delivery of services to take full advantage of the potential of new information technologies to meet the needs of learning communities.

“(2) PURPOSE.—The purpose of the National Institute for Postsecondary Education, Libraries, and Lifelong Learning is to promote greater coordination of Federal research and development on issues related to adult learning and to carry out a program of research and development in adult learning to provide nonpartisan, research-based leadership to the Nation as it seeks to improve libraries, postsecondary education, and lifelong learning throughout the United States. Such program—

“(A) shall promote greater coordination, cooperation, and interaction among entities within the Federal Government which support research and development related to postsecondary education, libraries, and lifelong learning;

“(B) shall enable greater collaboration among entities within the Federal Government which support research and development related to postsecondary education, libraries, and lifelong learning by supporting research and development projects which are carried out jointly by such entities;

“(C) shall support research and development in those areas of postsecondary education, libraries, and lifelong learning which are not being addressed sufficiently by other entities within the Federal Government;

“(D) may include basic and applied research, development, replication, and evaluation activities in such areas as—

“(i) methods of assessing and evaluating individual, program, and institutional performance;

“(ii) the uses and applications of new technologies to improve program effectiveness and enhance student learning;

“(II) instructional practices and programs which are effective in correctional settings;

“(III) new models of service delivery for public library systems which expand opportunities for lifelong learning;

“(IV) effective programs and approaches which promote greater access to and success by minorities in postsecondary programs which prepare them for scientific, technical, teaching, and health career fields;

“(V) effective approaches to work-based learning; and

“(VI) the most effective training methods for adults to upgrade education and vocational skills;

“(iv) the effectiveness of Historically Black Colleges and Universities, Tribally-Controlled Indian Community Colleges, women's colleges, and other special mission institutions in fulfilling their mission of providing access and equal opportunity in higher education;

“(v) the quality of higher education at all levels and the roles and responsibilities of regional and national accrediting agencies in assuring the quality and relevance of academic goals and objectives established by institutions of higher education;

“(vi) approaches to improving the productivity of colleges, community colleges, universities, and other postsecondary institutions;

“(vii) financial barriers to postsecondary educational opportunity, including—

“(I) the role of Federal programs authorized under title IV of the Higher Education Act and State grant and work programs in mitigating such barriers;

“(III) the extent and impact of student reliance on loans to meet the costs of higher education;

“(viii) opportunities for adults to continue their education beyond higher education and graduate school, in the context of lifelong learning and information-finding skills; and

“(ix) preparing students for a lifetime of work, the ability to adapt through retraining to the changing needs of the work force and the ability to learn new tasks.

“(3) INVOLVEMENT OF CERTAIN AGENCIES AND ORGANIZATIONS.—In promoting coordination and collaboration on research and development on issues related to postsecondary education, libraries, and lifelong learning, the Institute shall, as appropriate, seek the involvement of—

“(A) within the Department of Education—

"NATIONAL EDUCATION DISSEMINATION SYSTEM

"SEC. 405C. (a) IN GENERAL.—

"(1) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds as follows:

"(A) In order to improve the American educational system for all students, achieve the national education goals, and provide for greater educational equity, policymakers, administrators, teachers, and parents must have ready access to the best information and methods available as a result of educational research and development.

"(B) The Office of Educational Research and Improvement should have as one of its primary purposes the dissemination of such information and methods in order to assist the national education reform effort.

"(C) All current resources within the Office, the Department, and other agencies that can help accomplish this goal should be coordinated by the Assistant Secretary so as to form a systematic process to accomplish these objectives.

"(D) Education research has the capacity to improve teaching and learning in our Nation's schools, however, teachers need training in the developmental skills necessary to translate research into practice and to allow them to become a cadre of knowledgeable practitioners and leaders in educational improvement.

"(E) Adequate linkages between research and development providers and practitioners are essential to ensuring that research on effective practice is useful, disseminated and supported with technical assistance to all educators, and that all educators are partners in the research and development process.

"(2) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this section is to—

"(A) create a national system of dissemination, development, and educational improvement in order to create, adapt, identify, validate, and disseminate to educators, parents, and policymakers those educational programs that have potential or have been shown to improve educational opportunities for all students; and

"(B) empower and increase the capacity of teachers to participate in the research and development process.

"(3) DEFINITION OF EDUCATIONAL PROGRAM.—For the purposes of this section, the term 'educational program' includes educational policies, research findings, practices, and products.

Mr. FORD of Michigan (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House amendment to the Senate amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the initial request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES ON H.R. 1804

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House insist on its amendment to the Senate amendment to the bill, H.R. 1804, and ask for a conference with the Senate thereon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

MOTION TO INSTRUCT OFFERED BY MR. DUNCAN

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Mr. DUNCAN moves that the managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two houses on the bill H.R. 1804 be instructed to agree with section numbered 405, of the Senate amendment, concerning school prayer.

Mr. DUNCAN (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DUNCAN] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume. Mr. Speaker, this is a very simple motion to instruct, offered by myself, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. EMERSON] and the ranking member of the Committee on Rules, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON], both very hardworking and diligent Members of the House.

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield and if he would agree with me not to take up the time of the House over an argument that does not exist, I will be happy to accept the gentleman's instructions if we do not have to go through an hour of useless debate.

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, the only problem I have is that several Members have asked for time to speak on this motion.

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, in my State they call that "whipping a dead horse. If you do not want to take what I give you, I will fight you."

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DUNCAN. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. EMERSON. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I do not disagree with what the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD] is proposing but——

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I will ask unanimous consent that everybody have 5 days to put everything they want to in the RECORD about this.

Mr. EMERSON. My point is going to be—and I think I have the floor—that inasmuch as permission was granted for the motion to instruct to not be read, and the gentleman from Tennessee had commenced his remarks and then entered into a colloquy with the gentleman from Michigan, I have no objection to what the gentleman from Michigan is proposing, but I think we should perhaps backtrack and have the motion to instruct read so that indeed the House knows what it is acting upon.

Mr. Speaker, I therefore ask unanimous consent that the motion to instruct be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the motion offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DUNCAN].

The Clerk read as follows:

> Mr. DUNCAN moves that the managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill H.R. 1804 be instructed to agree with section numbered 405, of the Senate amendment, concerning school prayer.

□ 1620

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, I will simply say this:

I appreciate the very kind offer by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD], certainly one of the kindest men in this Chamber, and I appreciate his offer. I will just simply say this:

I also appreciate the very strong support I have had from the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. EMERSON], the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON], the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. INHOFE], and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. STEARNS].

With that, Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. EMERSON].

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today along with my colleague from Tennessee to offer a motion to instruct conferees on Goals 2000 legislation. This motion instructs conferees to recede and concur to language recently passed by the Senate concerning school prayer. The amendment offered by Senator HELMS overwhelmingly passed the Senate by a vote of 75 to 22. I think it is important to note that an almost identical amendment to this one was passed by the House of Representatives in 1989 by a vote of 269 to 135—almost a 2-to-1 margin.

First, let me spell out what this language does do and then make it clear what it doesn't do. This language will prevent any school district which has a policy of prohibiting voluntary student-initiated prayer in the schools from receiving any Federal funds authorized by this act or any other act. In other words, it simply forbids school districts from setting up official policies or procedures with the intent and purpose of prohibiting individuals from voluntarily saying prayers at school.

This language does not mandate school prayer or require schools to write any particular prayer. Under this language, a school is not required to do anything in favor of voluntary prayer. It simply must refrain from instituting policies prohibiting voluntary student prayer.

The Founding Fathers intended religion to provide a moral anchor for our democracy. Wouldn't they be puzzled to return to modern-day America and find, among elite circles in academia and the media, a scorn for the public expression of religious values. I find it ironic that while taxpayers' dollars are being used by bureaucrats to distribute condoms in our public schools across America, our children are prohibited from reading the Bible. This sends a powerful message to our children—and it is the wrong message.

One of the many liberties our forefathers founded this great Nation upon was freedom of religion; a freedom to pray to the God we want, when we want, and where we want. Unfortunately, this freedom has been eroded by the Supreme Court over the last few decades. I firmly believe that no one should be forced to pray, especially if a certain prayer is contrary to an individual's beliefs. But, there can be no question that every American citizen has the right to pray voluntarily whenever and wherever he or she chooses, and that includes children in public schools. This is protected under the first amendment; "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." It is that second part that I ask you to pay special attention to today.

As President Reagan so eloquently stated in 1982, "the first amendment of the Constitution was not written to protect the people of this country from religious values; it was written to protect religious values from government tyranny." I urge you to vote for the motion to instruct conferees.

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. INHOFE].

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Tennessee for his foresight in seizing upon this opportunity to address the 1963 Supreme Court decision that attempted to extract God from our public school system. This 1963 travesty may have gone unnoticed by many of the American people, but it did not go unnoticed by God.

We have a very famous young Oklahoman by the name of Charles David Barton. David has written a number of books on the behavioral history of Americans. He is a Ph.D, an intellectual type, and, although he is a stray Christian himself, his message is not so much for Christians and believers as it is for nonbelievers and agnostics. His books, one of which is "America: To Pray or Not To Pray," are filled with charts and graphs. He traces the behavioral history of Americans in such areas as teenage pregnancy, drug addictions, violent crimes, divorce, suicide, and other perversions. You do not have to accept his conclusions by faith, but by logic. These perversions chart horizontal for 200 years until 1963 when they shot up and off the charts. Can it be just a coincidence that 1963 was the year that the U.S. Supreme Court made their decision on school prayer?

We spend a lot of time around here attempting to legislate youth morality. What Mr. Duncan is attempting to do is go back to the source. For our children's sake and for God's sake, support the Duncan amendment.

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. STEARNS].

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of the motion to instruct conferees to accept the Senate provisions to H.R. 6 supporting constitutionally protected school prayer.

This language passed the Senate by a margin of 77–25 and is similar to language that passed the House by a vote of 269–135 in 1989. It would apply only to voluntary prayer and would expressly prohibit any State or local education agency from requiring any person to participate in or influence the form or content of these prayers.

Every day, both Houses of this Congress open with a prayer. No Member is compelled to participate against his or her will, but the opportunity to take a moment for spiritual reflection is valued by many of us. However, for those students in our public schools who seek to pray voluntarily at landmark events such as high school graduation or who want the opportunity to take a moment for silent reflection at the beginning of their school day, this right is under constant attack.

For too long, our constitutionally protected right of freedom of religion has been misinterpreted and distorted into a Government-mandated denial of the right to exercise religion.

Even as a wide variety of interest groups seek to require positive portrayals of their lifestyles as part of our public school curriculum, the right to acknowledge the common values that have shaped this Nation's spiritual character is denied.

Many Americans cannot understand how we have become a Nation where condoms are distributed at the school, but the Golden Rule cannot be posted on a classroom wall.

Mr. Speaker, I believe this Nation headed down the wrong path when we began to deny the right of voluntary religious expression as part of our civic life, especially in the classroom. It is very fashionable these days to speak about the crisis of values in America, especially among our young people.

I personally believe that the key moment in the beginning of this crisis of values occurred when open acknowledgment of religion was removed from our schools.

We simply cannot, on one hand, deny our children the right to acknowledge their spirituality at the civic institution where they have the greatest daily contact—the schools—and expect them to absorb lessons on the virtuous way to live.

We should never fool ourselves into thinking that we can provide our children with a "value neutural" education. There simply is no such thing. Rather, what we have seen over the last 30 years is an interpretation of the law that is fundamentally hostile to any religious expression.

The Duncan-Emerson-Solomon-Stearns amendment would restore some balance to this greatly unbalanced situation.

It is very limited in scope and only affects those types of religious speech that the Supreme Court has ruled are not coercive or represent any form of establishment of religion.

This is the view of religion that our Founding Fathers had in mind. I would like to close today by quoting two of the greatest heroes of this Nation on the subject—Benjamin Franklin and Thomas Jefferson.

With regard to the beginning of a session of Congress with a prayer, Franklin stated,

> I have lived, Sir, a long time, and the longer I live, the more convincing proofs I see of this truth—that God governs in the affairs of men. And if a sparrow cannot fall to the ground without his notice, is it probable that an empire can rise without his aid?

And on the Jefferson Memorial, we can read the role of religion as Thomas Jefferson saw it,

> All men shall be free to profess and by argument maintain, their opinions on matters of religion. I know of but one code of morality for men whether acting singly or collectively.

The Duncan-Emerson-Solomon-Stearns motion returns the proper balance between our civic lives and our spiritual lives. It returns freedom to the children of America that they can acknowledge, in their own way and without coercion, the God in which they believe. I ask your support for this motion, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, this is a very simple motion to instruct offered by myself, Mr. EMERSON from Missouri and the ranking member of the Rules Committee, Mr. SOLOMON, both very hardworking and diligent Members of the House.

Mr. Speaker, this motion simply instructs the conferees on the Goals 2000 bill, H.R. 1804, to agree to the Senate language concerning prayer in school, which, just a few weeks ago, the other body overwhelmingly passed by a vote of 75–22, including a substantial majority of both parties. In addition, the House passed very similar language in 1989 by a huge margin, 269–135, almost 2 to 1.

Mr. Speaker, every day when both bodies of this Congress begin a session, we have a prayer. Although our students cannot pray, we do in the Congress. And these prayers are led by priests, rabbis, and ministers from many different religions. But our students cannot pray in schools or at graduation ceremonies.

We tell our children that it is OK to pass out condoms at school, but we tell them that they cannot pray. And we wonder what is happening to our children and why our Nation's moral values have declined.

Mr. Speaker, let me read exactly the language this motion to instruct would have us agree to.

> No funds made available through the Department of Education under this act, or any other act, shall be available to any State or local educational agency which has a policy of denying, or which effectively prevents participation in constitutionally protected prayer in public schools by individuals on a voluntary basis.
> Neither the United States nor any State nor any local educational agency shall require any person to participate in prayer or influence the form or content of any constitutionally protected prayer in such public schools.

This language is intended to deny Federal funds to school districts which have an active prohibition—written, verbal, or simply an "understanding"—or which "effectively prevent" constitutional student-initiated prayer in public schools.

Our Founding Fathers came to this country to get freedom of religion, not freedom from religion.

This language simply codifies language which would prohibit schools from receiving Federal funds if they prevent students from engaging in student-led, student-initiated prayer.

This is a well-meaning and innocuous amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to instruct.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LEWIS of Georgia). The question is on the motion to instruct offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DUNCAN].

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 367, nays 55, not voting 11, as follows:

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I regret that I was not present on Wednesday, February 23, 1994, to vote on roll call vote Nos. 28, 29, and 30. I was attending the funeral of a close friend. Had I been present I would have voted the following:

No. 28, On approving the Journal—No.

No. 29, House Resolution 343, Condemning Nation of Islam Leader Kahlid Abdul Muhammad—Yes.

No. 30, H.R. 1804, Motion to instruct conferees to agree to the Helms Amendment—Yes.

HOUR OF MEETING ON TOMORROW

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourn today, it adjourn to meet at 10 a.m. tomorrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

FURTHER PLANS OF THE COMMITTEE ON RULES REGARDING H.R. 6, IMPROVING AMERICA'S SCHOOLS ACT OF 1994

(Mr. MOAKLEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. MOAKLEY. Madam Speaker, I would like to inform members about the Rules Committee's further plans regarding H.R. 6, the "Improving America's Schools Act of 1994." On February 17, a Dear Colleague letter was circulated by the Rules Committee and on Tuesday, February 22, a floor statement was made by Mr. GORDON informing Members that amendments to H.R. 6 should be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD prior to consideration. At that time it was recommended that amendments be printed in the RECORD on Tuesday, February 22, or Wednesday, February 23.

I would like to inform Members that the Rules Committee met today at 2 p.m. and has recommended an open rule that will require that any amendments to H.R. 6 be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD no later than Thursday, February 24. This will give Members an extra day to prepare their amendments.

Members should be aware, however, that the floor schedule indicates that consideration of this bill will begin tomorrow and will be considered by title. Therefore, if Member's have amendments to the first several titles of the bill, they need to get those amendments printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD today to ensure consideration tomorrow.

Amendments should be drafted to H.R. 6 as reported from the Committee on Education and Labor. This bill is available in the document room. The rule provides that the bill be read by title except for title I. Title I, which is the actual reauthorization of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act, will be read by the individual titles within that act. Amendments should be titled "Submitted for printing under clause 6 of rule XXIII" and submitted at the Speaker's table. Amendments do not need to be submitted to the Rules Committee.

Mr. SOLOMON. Madam Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOAKLEY. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SOLOMON. Madam Speaker, I just want to say to the gentleman that he has been speaking about H.R. 6, and that is a bill that so many people have been calling and writing in concerning for the last several days. It deals with home schooling and with the private and parochial schools.

Mr. MOAKLEY. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. SOLOMON. If the gentleman will yield further, just so that the Members will know, the Members who are concerned about this, we will be debating the amendment tomorrow, the so-called Armey amendment, which will relieve many of the concerns that many home schoolers and private schoolers have had. That debate will take place on this floor tomorrow, and I commend the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOAKLEY] for helping to bring this to the floor under an open rule, which would allow this House to work its will. I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] for his cooperation in the Committee on Rules in putting this matter together.

REPORT ON RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 6, ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY EDUCATION AMENDMENTS OF 1993

Mr. MOAKLEY, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 103-426) on the resolution (H. Res. 366) providing for consideration of the bill (H.R. 6) to extend for 6 years the authorizations of appropriations for the programs under the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, and for certain other purposes, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

FIRE SAFE CIGARETTE ACT OF 1994

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOAKLEY] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Madam Speaker, today, I introduced the Fire Safe Cigarette Act of 1994, which would significantly reduce the number of fires caused by carelessly discarded cigarettes. This legislation would give the Consumer Product Safety Commission regulatory authority to develop a standard for a firesafe cigarette. Cigarette manufacturers would then have 1 year to comply with the standard.

I became involved with this issue back in 1979 when a family of seven perished in a cigarette related fire in my congressional district. Five young children—all under the age of 10—were needlessly killed. This fire could have been prevented if a firesafe cigarette was available.

I first started working on this issue 15 years ago. Since that time more than 20,000 people have been killed by cigarette related fires—many of them innocent children. The fact that cigarettes have escaped fire safety regulations for the past 15 years is particularly disturbing to me. The Consumer Product Safety Commission banned lawn darts after 3 children were killed, but they have been remiss in promulgating regulations for cigarettes even though more than 100 children die each year from cigarette related fires. This is unacceptable.

There is no legitimate reason for further delays. Quite simply, firesafe cigarettes are already in the marketplace. Past studies proved that it is technically and economically feasible to develop a firesafe cigarette and the cigarette manufacturers have proven that it is commercially feasible. No more children should have to suffer such a horrid death as those young children in my congressional district did back in 1979.

Many people I have talked to over the years do not realize that cigarette-related fires are the leading cause of fire deaths. In fact, if you asked someone walking down the street that question, they probably would say electric space heaters cause more fires. But in 1990 alone, there were 44,000 cigarette-related fires that resulted in 1,200 deaths and 3,360 injuries. How many more innocent children have to be killed, maimed, or permanently disfigured before responsible action is taken?

These fires take a considerable toll on society. A recent study concluded that the direct cost of cigarette-ignited fire deaths, injuries, and property damage was $4 billion a year. A mandatory firesafe cigarette standard would significantly reduce these costs to society. In terms of health care costs alone the savings would be enormous. Treatment for burn injuries is the most expensive type of medical care today. And these fires disproportionately impact low-income families—those who have no means of paying the hospital bill. This legislation would significantly reduce the number of fires and thus reduce health care costs—particularly Medicare and Medicaid.

In conclusion, cigarette-related fires have been a drain on our Nation's resources. We can no longer afford to ignore this insidious problem. The studies and the technical work needed to set a performance standard have been completed. There are five firesafe cigarettes already in the marketplace. Congress now needs to act responsibly and pass the Fire Safe Cigarette Act of 1994.

FEDERAL RESERVE RISE IN INTEREST RATES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Madam Speaker, the Federal Reserve's ability to befuddle observers and manipulate the press is clear. Yesterday, Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan's monetary policy statement provided no meaningful clue of our Nation's policy and perpetuated the Fed Chairman's reputation as "the master of ambiguity." The Fed's message is always "Trust us to do the right thing and don't ask why."

As usual, Chairman Greenspan provided no rationale for raising interest rates for an inflation no one can see. He asks us to rely on concepts that have shown little or no relationship to inflation, such as the low level of the real Federal funds rate. This is simply more Fed-speak, that says little and forces everyone to guess what the Fed is really doing and why.

Even though the Fed's record of monetary policy is a long series of mistakes and miscalculations, the Fed enjoys the status ordinarily reserved for demigods. Critics are few and far between.

More often than not, the Federal Reserve receives positive press for bad policy—and there may be a reason for this. The Fed carefully nurtures its public image by cultivating friends in the media and bludgeoning critics. I have found evidence of this in former Federal Reserve Chairman Arthur Burns' papers in the Gerald Ford Presidential Library in Ann Arbor, MI.

The paper from which I will quote reveals a plan to use the office of one of the most powerful positions in our Government, Federal Reserve Chairman, to retaliate against a reporter who was critical of the Federal Reserve by appealing to the publisher of the Washington, DC, newspaper where he was employed.

Nicholas von Hoffman, who had appeared regularly as a commentator on CBS and today is a writer for the New York Observer, was a columnist for the Washington Post in 1974. He had the temerity to write a number of columns that were critical of the Federal Reserve.

The criticism undoubtedly provoked a note from Joseph Coyne—a Federal Reserve official who still handles press relations for the Federal Reserve—to Federal Reserve Chairman Arthur Burns on December 6, 1974. I quote from the note:

> Concerning our conversation yesterday about Nicholas von Hoffman, Bart Rowan [Washington Post columnist] thinks it would be an excellent idea for you to discuss the matter with Katherine Graham [the owner of the Washington Post]. He said he has discussed von Hoffman on several occasions with Ben Bradlee, the Post's executive editor. He is certain that Mrs. Graham would approach Bradlee on the question if you discussed it with her.
> There are, of course, certain dangers in this approach. Bart, of course favors it strongly because you would be supporting his view against von Hoffman. Additionally, Ben Bradlee's reaction to an approach of this nature might be: "Washington officialdom is squirming: keep up the good work, von Hoffman."

This kind of manipulation of the press certainly is not an isolated incident. The Fed, to this day, feeds valuable morsels to its friends and freezes out its critics to ensure positive coverage.

At the October 19, 1993, hearing before the Banking Committee, substantial evidence was presented that the Federal Open Market Committee that manages the Nation's money supply, frequently leaked its so-called supersecret policy changes.

The Federal Reserve officials at the hearings all said they knew nothing about leaks even though the Banking Committee found that the president of the St. Louis Federal Reserve Bank had cancelled publication of an article after receiving my invitation to testify, because the article contained extensive information about leaks from FOMC meetings.

At this Banking Committee hearing, Cleveland Federal Reserve President Jerry Jordan testified in rather strident tones, "We are the central bank. Central Banks don't leak." But at the same hearing, Chairman Alan Greenspan was not singing from the same sheet of music when he said the "problem of leaks is behind us."

Chairman Greenspan and colleagues of the pristine monetary temple, please explain the article in the Saturday, February 12, 1994, Washington Post by John Berry that describes your last FOMC meeting which he said he obtained from "Fed and administration sources." One the first day of the FOMC meetings, Thursday, February 3, 1994, according to that story, the members of the FOMC "adjourned that evening without formally taking up the question of rates but with a consensus forming."

Did Mr. Berry receive some psychic waves from the Fed building at 20th and Constitution or did one of the monks who knew nothing about leaks again break the code of silence?

I ask my colleagues to support my bill, the Federal Reserve System Accountability Act of 1993 (H.R. 28) which would require prompt release of monetary policy changes, timely release of a detailed record of FOMC meetings, and allow the General Accounting Office [GAO] to examine substantial parts of Federal Reserve operations which are now restricted from inspection. This is not legislation aimed at political interference of short-run monetary policy; it is legislation that provides for individual accountability for powerful Government officials whose decisions affect the economic well-being of all Americans.

GREENSPAN GLASNOST: FED SPRINGS A LEAK—GONZALEZ UNEARTHS TRANSCRIPTS; DONALDSON QUAFFS ROOFTOP BEERS

(By Nicholas von Hoffman)

If Indiana Jones had been clued in, he wouldn't have traveled halfway around the world to the Temple of Doom to test his skills at wresting treasure from formidable places. In Washington, there is a castle keep they call the Temple of Money, from which no word nor whisper ever escapes. It is the Federal Reserve Board, dwelling opaquely behind the bronze doors of an inhospitable, Art Deco, marble sanctuary built near the Lincoln Memorial in 1937—an organization famous inside the Beltway as the one leakfree institution in the national capital. Now, for the first time, there is hope that the musty files and fabled secrets of the Fed will see the light of day.

While fact, blabber, gossip and rumor pour forth from the C.I.A. and the National Security Agency, only silence has ever emanated from the Fed, the complex Government entity charged with controlling inflation and carrying out other important if MEGO-causing activities (MEGO being, as you may already know, an acronym for the expression "mine eyes glaze over," as yours surely will should they fall on the contents of the warehouses full of statistical information contained in the Fed's files). The Fed, because it decides how much money will be in circulation, what interest rates shall be and whether the mightiest financial institutions stand or fall, also has a decisive influence on whether we have boom times or bad times, or which ones of us can buy a home and which ones of us cannot. It was the Fed's refusal, until only a few months ago, to act on discrimination in mortgage lending that prevented countless thousands of blacks and other minorities from becoming home owners.

A recent attempt by Paul Starobin of the National Journal to use the Freedom of Information Act to obtain the minutes of a meeting of the Fed's central decision-making organ, the Open Market Committee, earned him a stack of the blacked-out, censored pages familiar to frustrated investigative reporters. But whoever redacted the minutes failed to ink out one line from the committee's proceedings, which quoted Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan adjuring his colleagues on Dec. 22, 1992: "Let's be very careful about sneezing in this room!"

In an institution where even the allergies are classified, it's small wonder that the world outside the Fed has had no knowledge of the Open Market Committee's decisions, aside from whatever can be gleamed from the brief and delphically incomprehensible statements issued monthly by the priests of the temple.

The battle to find out what's going on behind the temple doors and why—mostly waged by a succession of frustrated House Banking Committee chairmen—has been going on for decades. Even powerful legislators have been at a disadvantage, though, because the Fed doesn't have to go to Congress for appropriates. It lives off the profits of the hundreds of billions of dollars in Government securities it trades every year, setting its own budgets and living, rather like the late, not completely great Nicolae Ceasusescu of Romania, a happy, unaudited and unsupervised existence. At $161,000 a year, members of the senior professional staff at the Fed make $13,000 a year more than anyone in President Clinton's cabinet.

GONZALEZ GETS KNIFE INTO CLAM

Only now does it appear that the tip of the knife has been successfully inserted into the clam. Representative Henry B. Gonzalez of Texas, the Banking Committee's current chairman, has scored a lucky hit comparable to the discovery of the Nixon tapes during Watergate. He has brought to light the existence of verbatim transcripts of the Open Market Committee's meetings dating back to 1976. Only some of the contents of those transcripts have yet seen the light of day, but enough is now in the open to offer a picture of how the people in what may be our most important government organization hang on to power by controlling information.

Here we have the late Arthur Burns, then chairman of the Fed, reacting in 1976 to a Freedom of Information suit demanding the minutes of the Open Market Committee: "* * * I can see that the document [the minutes] is not going to stay with the plaintiff. It'll be on Capitol Hill before long and I can [imagine] the derogatory statements that might be made * * * They [the House Banking Committee] sit around, and they talk and what they know and the number of facts they consider is very scanty. It's a talking committee and that would cause some mischief * * * I see also the very real possibility that after all is done, there'll be individual statements that will be picked up by members of Congress or the press or both, that will cause us additional work and, what is worse than that, embarrassment."

'WE'D LOOK VERY BAD'

A year later, Burns, a massively fawned-over and deferred-to public figure throughout his career, was warning his colleagues about the consequences if the public got wind of how much money the Fed spends on itself: "You see, this question about Federal Reserve budgets disturbs me * * * All right now, you have an open meeting [about the Fed budget] and there may be some newspaper fellows there and * * * Common Cause and * * * Ralph Nader's crowd and whatnot. Here, let us say we take up a budget coming to $600 million plus, and we do that within an hour, and, well, we'd look very bad. Therefore * * * I would consider it my duty to just stretch it out over a day. Well, that's terrible * * * Now there must be an answer to that. Well, we have enough ingenuity in this room, I think, to find the answer * * *"

The answer was a practiced use of force and favors to control criticism not unlike the strategy used by J. Edgar Hoover during his long reign at the F.B.I. For instance, the Banking Committee staff unearthed a 1974 memo to Burns from Joe Coyne, now the Fed's head flack, offering suggestions about how to deal with me when I was writing unflattering articles about the temple for The Washington Post.

"Concerning our conversation yesterday about Nicholas von Hoffman, Bart Rowen [a Post financial writer] thinks it would be an excellent idea for you to discuss the matter with Katherine Graham." The memo goes on to ponder the dangers of also approaching Ben Bradlee, the now-retired legendary Post editor. Was there any chance of getting him to silence this critic? Or would "Bradlee's reaction to an approach of this nature * * * be [that] Washington officialdom is squirming, keep up the good work."

Another memo from Mr. Coyne in the same period, dated Dec. 22, 1976, indicates that, like Hoover's, the Fed press policy has been to cultivate certain favorites with flattery and scoops. This teacher's pet system apparently continues in place. John Berry of the Washington Post is one of those smiled upon by Mr. Greenspan, who also makes hospitable gestures such as inviting ABC's Sam Donaldson and PBS's Judy Woodruff to drink beer and watch the Fourth of July fireworks on the roof of the Fed's well-situated building on the Capitol mall.

There are other goodies to be had for good will. In the 30 months ending last June, the Fed stuffed almost $3 million in consultant fees into the pockets of 290 academic economists. For other members of "Club Fed," as Mr. Starobin refers to the place, there are winter golfing sprees in Florida paid for under the heading of "conferences." Under the circumstances, it is amazing that any criticism of the Fed ever appears—although, under Mr. Greenspan, its record is by no means all negative.

In an era when bean counters and pathological algorithmics get to the top, it is fitting that Mr. Greenspan, who comes across as a remote numeroholic, should gain great power. He is a speaker of such unalleviated dullness that even short exposure to the anesthetic vapors exhaled with his words causes instant narcosis. But history talks to whoever answers the phone, and on Oct. 19, 1987, it rang in Mr. Greenspan's Dallas, Tex., hotel room. The stock market had crashed 500 points and seemed poised to crash 500 more, burying half the major banking and brokering institutions of the nation in a trillion dollars' worth of bankruptcies and losses. Mr. Greenspan became the man of the moment, staying on the phone through the night, arranging for mountains of money to save Wall Street and the securities industry.

The next morning, the nation's financial institutions opened for business with cash in the drawer, ready to meet all demands and obligations. Annuities, pension funds, insurance policies remained solvent, paying out to the millions who depend upon them. The same wearying qualities that make Mr. Greenspan less than a barrel of chuckles stood him in good stead when the crisis came.

Since that time, it's been suspected that, thanks to a certain unannounced policy decision, Wall Street can't crash past a certain point because the Fed will sustain the market. The Fed's critics think that such momentous policies, good or bad, should not be decided in secret. The problem is not that Mr. Greenspan himself is afflicted with agoraphobia, this is a man who's performed in public since he was a kid, a man long since accustomed to the searching eyes of strangers.

DID GREENSPAN INHALE?

Before he threw himself into the turgidities of economics at New York University and Columbia, he studied at Juilliard and became, by most accounts, an excellent saxophone player. As a musician, he swung both ways, classical and jazz, and was good enough to play bebop professionally with Henry Jerome's band in the 40's at the long-since-closed Childs' restaurant.

Many years afterward, Jerome recalled those days for jazz historian Bill Crow that Dorothy Kilgallen's column had once run a blind item about his ensemble, asking, "What name bandleader had his whole bank smoking marijuana in phone booths?" If that other political saxophonist, Bill Clinton, had been playing with Jerome, he probably would have been holding his breath so he wouldn't have to inhale, but Mr. Greenspan never got that close. While his fellow bank members were getting high during the breaks, he was downstairs doing the payroll.

Appointed to the Fed chairmanship by Ronald Reagan in 1987 after a career of faithful Republican Party hackery dating back to the 1960's, this transparent personality has been around for decades. "Alan Greenspan has probably been a key player in more Republican Presidential campaigns and Republican Party platforms and Republican administrations than any other economist in the country," according to Mr. Reagan's domestic policy adviser, Martin Anderson.

But the Fed chief has always had his wild side. Years ago, Mr. Greenspan took up goldbuggery under the influence of Ayn Rand, the wild-eyed anti-Communist Russian émigrée, who wrote The Fountainhead and Atlas Shrugged and founded a political cult best described as a mélange of Nietzsche and Adam Smith. When she died in 1982, Mr. Greenspan came to the funeral, where he found his guru resting in her coffin under a large dollar sign.

His gold-loving, inflation-fighting dedication to the sound dollar endures, as his recent ratcheting up of interest rates shows, but Mr. Greenspan at least has opened the temple door a crack. In the last few weeks, he has said more about Open Market Committee goings-on than any chairman in memory, but there are still plenty of mystical secrets within the Fed for Indiana Jones to make off with—if he can only figure out how to get his hands on the booty.

Tne SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Connecticut (Ms. DELAURO) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. DELAURO. Mr. Speaker, while many Americans watch with pride as our talented athletes compete in the World Olympic Games in Lillehammer, there are a great number of athletes here and around the world that are still in training. For all athletes, the rigors of training are universal: hard work, long hours, and true dedication. So are the payoffs: self-confidence, pride in achievement, and friendships that last a lifetime. Around the world and across our Nation each year, athletes with mental retardation train for Special Olympic competitions. Each holds the ultimate hope of qualifying for the World Games.

In July 1995, New Haven, West Haven, and Hamden, CT will host the 1995 Special Olympics World Summer Games. We are honored and excited to have 6,500 athletes travel to Connecticut from over 120 countries to participate in the ninth Special Olympics World Summer Games. It is for these athletes that I rise today to introduce the 1995 Special World Summer Games Commemorative Coin Act.

The bill authorizes the issuance of 800,000 limited-edition one dollar silver coins, which will be emblematic of the 1995 Special Olympic World Games. Funds raised through the sale of the coins will be used to provide a world-class sporting event for athletes with mental retardation; to demonstrate to a global audience the extraordinary talents, dedication and courage of persons with mental retardation; and to underwrite part of the cost of staging the 1995 Special Olympics World Games.

Thousands of athletes from every State in the Union, and from almost every nation in the world, will come to Connecticut to demonstrate that they have the desire, courage, and the skills to compete in world class competition. The half-million spectators who come to watch will enjoy one of the most exciting and inspiring experiences of a lifetime. They will see outstanding athletic competition in the true Olympic spirit.

The 1995 Special Olympics World Games—the largest sporting event in the world in that year—will be held in first-class athletic avenues in the Greater New Haven area. Five prominent academic institutions—Albertus Magnus College, the University of New Haven, Quinnipiac College, Southern Connecticut State University, and Yale University—will host the event.

There will be extraordinary events displaying the splendor of world class sports with the raw power of courageous competitors overcoming stigma to achieve their personal best. Tens of millions of people will view the worldwide television coverage of this event. The Opening Ceremonies alone will have an audience of 90,000 persons. We are estimating that several Heads of State and First Ladies, as well as 20–30 Ambassadors will be present as President Clinton officially opens the Games.

Mr. Speaker, just last week we were notified that the President himself has agreed to serve as the honorary chairman of the 1995 Special Olympics World Games. This is a rare honor for any organization and unprecedented in the 25-year history of the Special Olympics. Moreover, the President has included the 1995 Special Olympics World Games as a member of a Task Force, chaired by Vice President GORE, to oversee Federal assistance to the 1994 World Cup activities in the United States and to the 1996 Olympic Games in Atlanta. In so doing, the President has recognized that the athletic accomplishments of Special Olympics athletes are as hard won and as courageous as those of non-disabled athletes. I am personally very grateful to President Clinton for his support, his vision, and his commitment to persons with mental retardation worldwide.

Mr. Speaker, an event of this magnitude requires substantial organization and planning. Like World Cup USA 1994 and the Atlanta Committee for the Olympics Games, the 1995 Special Olympics World Games Organizing Committee is looking to the collective wisdom and experience of the Federal Government as an invaluable resource. One such resource is the issuance of a commemorative coin honoring the Games. The cost-neutral bill which I am introducing today will raise up to $8 million to help underwrite the cost of staging the 1995 Special Olympics World Games.

I remind my colleagues that Special Olympics is a charity—a 501(c)(3) organization. There are no agents, no endorsements, no multi-million dollar contracts waiting at the end of the finish line for these athletes. Instead, there are thousands of athletes who train week after week for years to experience the sheer joy of competing and for the love of the sport. They deserve the opportunity to compete in New Haven. The funds raised by the issuance of this coin will help make their dreams a reality.

Please join me and over 60 other original cosponsors in supporting the 1995 Special Olympics World Games Commemorative Coin Act and honor Special Olympics athletes worldwide.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. CLAYTON). Pursuant to the Speaker's announced policy of February 11, 1994, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STOKES] is recognized for 1 hour as the majority leader's designee.

BLACK HISTORY MONTH

Mr. STOKES. Madam Speaker, I want to express my appreciation to my colleagues who are joining me in the Chamber this evening for our special order in observance of Black History Month. We take special pride in this opportunity to highlight and pay tribute to the notable accomplishments of African-Americans who have contributed so much to this great Nation. I am pleased to also recognize the efforts of our colleague, KWEISI MFUME, the distinguished chairman of the Congressional Black Caucus, who joins me in sponsoring this special order.

Madam Speaker, as we gather to commemorate Black History Month, we recognize the contributions of African-Americans to every facet of American history. Indeed, African-Americans have a rich and magnificent history; a history which is inextricably woven into the economic, social, and political fabric of the Nation.

In 1926, the late Dr. Carter G. Woodson understood that black Americans were not receiving recognition in history for their contributions. Therefore, he proposed setting aside 1 week during the month of February to commemorate the achievements of black Americans. In 1976 the observance was changed to Black History Month.

The Association for the Study of Afro-American Life and History, which Dr. Woodson founded, has selected the theme, "Empowering Afro-Americans Organizations: Present and Future," for the 1994 observance of Black History Month.

Madam Speaker, in his published work entitled, "Black Politics: A Theoretical and Structural Analysis," the author, Hanes Walton, Jr., notes the influence of black organizations or black pressure groups. He says,

> The principal tactic of black pressure groups, and one that serves to distinguish them from most other groups, is their appeal to the conscience of the people against the denial of justice in the broadest sense. The chief concern of black groups has been the attainment of rights that can only be had either through force, concern, or morality.

As we celebrate Black History Month, let us pause to pay tribute to Afro-American organizations whose founding and, more importantly, whose perseverance, has proven instrumental in the struggle for civil rights and economic justice here in America, and around the globe.

Madam Speaker, perhaps the best-known organization associated with black America and the struggle for civil rights is the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People [NAACP]. The NAACP came into being on February 12, 1909—the 100th anniversary of the birth of President Abraham Lincoln. The organization was founded in New York City by liberal whites and intellectual blacks, largely in response to the increasing outrages against blacks in the South during the early 1900's.

The NAACP set out to acquire for all black citizens the rights and privileges numerated in the Constitution. The organization relied chiefly upon legal proceedings, legislative action, and educational means to bring about social change. Leaders of the NAACP spoke out when poll taxes kept blacks from voting in the South. The organization appealed to the supreme court to outlaw segregation in the schools. Members of the NAACP sat at segregated lunch counters and marched to end Jim Crow laws in the South. Throughout its history, the organization has remained steadfast in its commitment to the struggle for equality.

Just recently, Dr. Benjamin Hooks retired as executive director of the NAACP. During Black History Month, we pause to recognize his leadership and historic contributions. I also take great pride in saluting the new president of this distinguished organization, Dr. Benjamin Chavis. I am proud to note that Dr. Chavis was an outspoken and celebrated leader in my congressional district of Cleveland prior to assuming this post.

Madam Speaker, similar to the NAACP, the National Urban League was also founded by blacks and whites in New York. The league was actually born as a coalition of three social agencies in New York City—the committee for improving the industrial conditions of Negroes in New York City; the League for the Protection of Colored Women; and the Committee on Urban Conditions among Negroes. In 1911, the organizations merged to become the National League of Urban Conditions Among Negroes, later abbreviated to the National Urban League.

The National Urban League began as an organization to help black migrants to New York City find suitable employment and make as smooth as possible a transition from rural southern to urban Northern life. a major goal of the league and its affiliates was to broaden economic opportunities for blacks by using the techniques of persuasion and conciliation to open up doors that had been closed before.

In the 1960's with the election of Whitney Young as its new president, the League emerged as a force in the struggle for civil rights. We recognize the tireless efforts of the leaders of this distinguished organization including Whitney Young, Vernon L. Jordan, and the organization's current president, John Jacob.

As we celebrate Black History Month, we recall that many of our Afro-American organizations came into being in the 1950's just as the civil rights movement in America was about to explode. One such organization is the Southern Christian Leadership Conference [SCLC] which was born out of the Montgomery bus boycott. It was in January 1957 that representatives from 10 Southern States, consisting mainly of black ministers, gathered at Atlanta's Ebenezer Baptist Church to establish an organization committed to the achievement of civil rights for black Americans.

The Southern Christian Leadership Conference chose as its president a gifted young black minister, Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., who as president of the Montgomery Improvement Association, was successful in desegregating a bus system in a city that was known for its harsh racial tactics.

Under the leadership of Dr. King, SCLC became one of the most influential and effective civil rights groups. The organization espoused a doctrine of nonviolent protest and passive resistance in its assault on segregation and discrimination.

Those who have followed Dr. King at the helm of this great organization, including Rev. Ralph Abernathy and the current president, Joseph Lowery, have continued to battle injustice and inequality.

Madam Speaker, the principles embraced by the founders of the NAACP, the National Urban League, and the SCLC continue to provide the framework for combating political, social, and economic racism. During Black History Month, let us pay tribute to other Afro-American organizations who share these same goals.

We recognize the efforts of the Congress of Racial Equality [CORE]. We salute Rev. Jesse Jackson and acknowledge the numerous contributions of Operation Push and the National Rainbow Coalition. We also pay special tribute to Dorothy Height whose leadership over the years has been instrumental to the National Council of Negro Women.

Madam Speaker, I believe that each of us in this Chamber needs look only in our congressional districts to identify Afro-American organizations who have had a a tremendous impact in the quest for empowerment. In my congressional district, I am proud to applaud the National Black Nurses Association, the Phillis Wheatley Association, the Black Professionals Association, and an organization of significant political clout which I founded, the Black Elected Democrats of Cleveland, Ohio [BEDCO].

This evening I also take special pride in recognizing the enormous contributions of the Congressional Black Caucus. This political empowering organization of which I am proud to be a founding member, has been instrumental in articulating the concerns of the African-American community. From the founding 13 to the present 40, we have grown not only in size, but also in significance, shaping the way America views the black community.

This special order in celebration of Black History Month provides just a glimpse of the historical contributions of African-American leaders and organizations to our Nation. However, we must recognize the larger picture; that not only in February, but in every month and, indeed, every day, African-American men and women are contributing to the building, shaping, and preservation of this great democracy. Our history is America's history.

Madam Speaker, I thank my colleagues for joining me in this special observance of Black History Month.

Madam Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. TUCKER].

Mr. TUCKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Madam Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to address this House and indeed the Nation on the question of Black History Month and certainly recognition of so many role models and so much prominent history.

This month has been called Black History Month, African-American History Month, and even, Madam Speaker, more recently African Heritage Month. Indeed, that underscores the need to look back into the heritage of persons of African-American descent in this country and remind ourselves of the rich heritage and indeed the rich history and the rich legacy which we have inherited.

Of course, you will hear many speeches over the next few minutes, or hours, alluding to so many different role models that we have had, and the list goes on and on and on.

I think that indeed points out the most important thing about black history, that black history is ongoing, it cannot be relegated to just February, it must not be something that is just educable for just a month, but it must be something that we must continue to educate ourselves on for a lifetime.

Indeed, not only must African-Americans learn and understand about African-American history but indeed this entire Nation must learn about African-American history. For if we are to better understand ourselves as Americans, where people do not continually say, "Why do you all want to be called African-Americans? Why not just be called Americans?"

Certainly this is a pluralistic society, and there are various aspects of America and Americans. But I think because it is a pluralistic society, that prospect does not make it mutually exclusive with the recognition and specifically the commemoration of the unique contributions and unique history of African-Americans in this society.

We are proud to be Americans here, but we also take some very specific pride in our unique history and the contributions of our ancestors. I do not think anyone who appreciates their own ethnicity or background would have any qualm or have any conflict with that.

Going back to the African-American history, it is so interesting that there is something new to learn every moment on this. I was reminded during this month by various programs on television—and I would encourage Americans to look at those programs—of a bit of information that I was not aware of. I was aware that certainly Martin Luther King gained great distinction as a Nobel Prize Winner. Last year we had the first Nobel Peace Prize Winner in literary, an African-American woman. But the question arose of who was the first black American, or back in those days, Negro, to win the Nobel Peace Prize for Peace? I thought it was Martin Luther King, but I was reminded it was Ralph Bunche. That certainly points to the fact, Madam Speaker, that here some 40 years ago a gentleman who became the first African-American to reach the high position, in fact the top position, in the United Nations at the time, Undersecretary General. Here was a time even before the civil rights movement, before Martin Luther King, before Stokeley Carmichael, before Angela Davis, before it was even popular to call yourself black, and this gentleman was able to move up into the higher ranks of the United Nations. Indeed, when his superior was unable to fulfill his commitment in the Middle East, certainly Ralph Bunche took on the leadership of negotiating peace in the Middle East between the Arabs and the Jews.

My point, Madam Speaker, is that our history is replete with the evidence of men and women who were ahead of their time and who braved all the adversities that faced them, and it seems to me that the message in black history needs to be that we need to be reminding our young people, and our families, of just how much we did achieve in the past while facing all kinds of adversities. And here we are with young people with an opportunity to be educated, and to have access to education, to training in the jobs, even though we know unemployment is higher disproportionately in our community, but there are those who are dropping out and are not taking advantage of the opportunities we have. Certainly we, as a community, have to pull together, and we have to create more Ralph Bunches, and more Martin Luther King, Juniors, and more Mary Barrys and more Harriet Tubmans.

Our history is today. We can make history new each and every day, Madam Speaker, and so I want to encourage us to follow that adage from the old African proverb that says that it takes a whole village to raise one child. That certainly is more important now than ever, as I conclude with my remarks, because the statistics show us today that the African-American community has, unfortunately, a unique aspect to it, and that is that 68 percent of all African-American families are headed by single parents, and those single parents are generally black women. So it is important that we, in light of that statistic, do all that we can as a community, particularly with the churches being a forefront of our community, to surround these women, young women, with the support they need to raise our young men in a way that we will not be able to say any longer that we have more black men in jail than we do in college.

Madam Speaker, this is a time where we not only need to revel in our history, but draw back from our history and to not have some of the unfortunate consequences of our social development repeated so.

So I thank the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STOKES] again for this time. I want to encourage his leadership and encourage the leadership of our chairman, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MFUME], and encourage all of us to work together with the Black Caucus and other African-American leaders to make sure that we can continue to see history made anew each and every day. And I salute the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STOKES] for his leadership because he has been a hero of mine, a role model of mine and for so many other young African-American men and women not only who espouse to the U.S. Congress, but who espouse to do great things, not only to contribute to African-American history, but to America as well. I say to the gentleman, My hat is off to you, and God bless you.

Mr. STOKES. Madam Speaker, I thank my friend and colleague for his very warm and kind remarks, and I appreciate his contributions to this special order.

I am pleased to yield at this time to the gentlewoman from Florida [Mrs. MEEK], our distinguished colleague who is a member of the Committee on Appropriations of the House and, in her own right, is a very distinguished Member.

Mrs. MEEK of Florida. Madam Speaker, I am honored to stand before you today, balancing on the strong shoulders of those who have preceded us and those who today tell us by word and deed that we are a proud, strong race of people. In fact, we are much like the old jack-in-the-box. Yes, the jack-in-the-box. You can push us down, clamp the lid shut, but when we hear the sweet refrain of the collective love and support of our black brothers and sisters, up we pop.

Throughout history there have been black men and women who, although oppressed and suppressed, have risen up to inspire and uplift us. There are so many—men like Frederick Douglas, Marcus Garvey, Dr. Martin Luther King, Malcolm X, and Nelson Mandela—women like Harriett Tubman, Rosa Parks, Mary McLeod Bethune and Dr. Dorothy Height. I could go on and on. We have been kings and queens, slaves, farmers, educators, poets, scientists, entertainers, preachers, businesspeople, cabinet members, Congress men and women and Senators. We have come far by the sweat of our brow through perseverance and dogged determination and, yes, definitely, through suffering. And while black people as a whole struggled mightily, a section of us have had an added obstacle to overcome—that of being a woman. So now you had to deal with being black and therefore thought not to be as good as a white man, and being a woman, therefore known not to be as good as any man. We were given no rights as blacks and didn't need any as women.

Then one day there came a 6-foot tall, thin, dark-skinned woman. She was an abolitionist, lecturer-preacher with a deep voice and a Dutch accent. After having lived half her life, this former slave had a revelation. It was necessary that everyone who would listen know that black people had rights and deserved to vote and that women were equal to men and deserved equal rights and dignity. This orator was born into slavery as Isabella Baumfree in 1797. Although technically "freed" in 1827 by New York's Emancipation Act, it was at age 46 that she felt a rebirth—a need to help her people. With that rebirth she gave herself a new name. Because she would travel up and down the land to bring her message—she took the name Sojourner. Because she was going to speak the truth to any who would listen—she took the name Truth. Yes, Sojourner Truth—a genuine inspiration to me in my life.

She never learned to read and write, yet she mesmerized people with her thorough understanding of the slave mentality and littlemindedness that was intent on keeping blacks and women downtrodden. She was stoned and beaten to keep her from speaking the truth in public, but nothing could keep her down, just like that jack-in-the-box I mentioned earlier. Throughout her long life of 80-plus years, Sojourner Truth never stopped. When she could no longer travel she taught freedwomen in Washington, DC, and crusaded for black settlements on western public lands.

And so, Sojourner Truth, here I am today, on my journey. You taught me to stand up and speak the truth. You taught me that as a black woman I had an almost impossible road to travel, but with God's help I could make it through. You taught me that no matter how far I had to travel, it was my duty to embrace my people—men and women, boys and girls—and lift them up.

Oh, there are so, so many wonderful black men and women who have inspired me in my life and continue to do so. But, you see, this lady is special to me because she was a woman. In an address to the Ohio Women's Rights Convention in 1851, Sojourner Truth addressed the issue of women's rights plainly and oh, so, magnificently when she said in her speech entitled "And Ain't I a Woman?":

> That man over there says that women need to be helped into carriages and lifted over ditches, and to have the best place everywhere. Nobody ever helps me into carriages, or over mud-puddles, or gives me any best place! And ain't I a woman? Look at me! Look at my arm. I have ploughed and planted, and gathered into barns, and no man could head me! And ain't I a woman? I could work as much and eat as much as a man—when I could get it—and bear the lash as well! And ain't I a woman? I have borne thirteen children, and seen them most all sold off to slavery, and when I cried out with my mother's grief, none but Jesus heard me! And ain't I a woman? * * * If the first woman God ever made was strong enough to turn the world upside down all alone, these women together ought to be able to turn it back, and get it right side up again! * * * Obliged to you for hearing me, and now old Sojourner ain't got nothing more to say.

Well, my friends, thanks to great black men and women like Sojourner Truth, we not only have a lot more to say, but many forums in which to say it. Imagine, here I stand in the well of the House of Representatives, a little black girl from tallahassee, FL, not only celebrating but living black history. Thank you, Sojourner Truth, and all the many other great blacks, past and present. I intend to make you proud.

[From the Columbian Orator]

SOJOURNER TRUTH: ADDRESS TO THE OHIO WOMEN'S RIGHTS CONVENTION, "AND AIN'T I A WOMAN?" AKRON, OH, 1851

WELL, CHILDREN,

> Where there is so much racket there must be something out of kilter. I think that twixt the Negroes of the South and the women at the North, all talking about rights, the white men will be in a fix pretty soon. But what's all this here talking about?
> That man over there says that women need to be helped into carriages and lifted over ditches, and to have the best place everywhere. Nobody ever helps me into carriages, or over mud-puddles, or gives me any best place! And ain't I a woman? Look at my arm. I have ploughed and planted, and gathered into barns, and no man could head me! And ain't I a woman? I could work as much and eat as much as a man—when I could get it—and bear the lash as well! And ain't I a woman? I have borne thirteen children, and seen them most all sold off to slavery, and when I cried out with my mother's grief, none but Jesus heard me! And ain't I a woman?
> Then they talk about this thing in the head; what's this they call it? [Intellect, someone whispers.] That's it, honey. What's that got to do with women's rights or Negro's rights? If my cup won't hold but a pint, and yours holds a quart, wouldn't you be mean not to let me have my little half-measure full?
> Then that little man in black there, he says women can't have as much rights as men, 'cause Christ wasn't a woman! Where did your Christ come from? From God and a woman! Man had nothing to do with Him.
> If the first woman God ever made was strong enough to turn the world upside down all alone, these women together ought to be able to turn it back, and get it right side up again! And now they is asking to do it, the men better let them.
> Obliged to you for hearing me, and now old Sojourner ain't got nothing more to say.

Madam Speaker, I say to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STOKES], I would say where he has led us here in the Congress, we are so proud of the role that he has created for us. It is merely now a matter of following in the footsteps of the senior Members who planted the seed before we got here, because they have done what God would have each of us do. And that is to give service, for service is a price we pay for the space which God let us occupy.

Mr. STOKES. Madam Speaker, I thank my distinguished friend and colleague from Florida for her very eloquent statement on this floor and her very kind remarks to the gentleman in the well.

I am now pleased to yield to a friend and colleague, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. HUTTO].

Mr. HUTTO. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me. Madam Speaker, I rise today in observance of Black History Month to pay tribute to three outstanding people from Pensacola, FL, in my congressional district.

These individuals were honored at the first annual Chappie James Award Banquet on February 12 for their continuous community service and their determination to be the very best. My wife Nancy and I were honored to attend.

Before I talk about the three awardees, I want to say a few words about the namesake of the event, Gen. Chappie James. A native of Pensacola, Chappie made us all proud of his service to his country. He was a decorated U.S. Air Force pilot in the Vietnam conflict and later became the first black officer to attain the rank of four-star general in the Air Force.

As a member of the Florida Legislature in the 1970's, it was great to see that body honor General James in a special ceremony. I remember vividly what an imposing figure he was and what a dynamic, patriotic speech he delivered to the legislature. General James made us all truly proud to be Americans.

At the recent banquet in his memory, it was good to see members of Chappie's family present, including his sister Mrs. Lillie James Frazier, an outstanding educator and citizen of Pensacola.

Madam Speaker, in contrast to some star athletes today, Emmitt Smith wants to be a role model and he has stated that plainly. He wants young people to follow his leadership. Before becoming the most valuable player in the National Football League and in the Super Bowl, Emmitt was a star at Escambia High School and then at the University of Florida. Emmitt has always been a hard worker and a true competitor. In a game against the New York Giants this season, Emmitt injured his shoulder but gallantly stayed in the game, and rushed the Dallas Cowboys to a win. He later led the Cowboys convincingly through the playoffs and to a second consecutive Super Bowl victory. All the while, Emmitt has credited his family and Pensacola upbringing for his success.

When asked how he avoided trouble as a youngster, Emmitt explained, "It never occurred to me then, and I would never dishonor myself or my family." Emmitt Smith, a true role model.

Madam Speaker, Pensacola is also home to the next superstar of boxing, Roy Jones, Jr. Roy is IBF World's Middleweight Champ. Fast and flashy, Roy definitely has a style people remember.

Roy represented the United States in the 1988 Olympics, winning a silver medal and the Val Barker Trophy as the outstanding boxer of the games. Many remember the bad decision that deprived him of a gold medal. But Roy plodded on to great things.

Roy is a good citizen and a good example for all of us. He often speaks to young people about the perils of drugs and the value of education and he is currently furthering his own education at Pensacola Junior College.

Madam Speaker, Sue Straughn is not only a local celebrity, but an inspiration and example to all of Pensacola. Sue is the senior anchor at WEAR-TV in Pensacola. Her 21 years at the station has made Sue a familiar face and a household name. Many stars just lend their name to charity letterheads. Sue does so much more than that. She is the founder and—for 14 years—has been the organizer of the Communities Caring at Christmas Campaign. She is the creator, producer and host of the annual Spotlight on Youth Talent Competition and Telethon.

Sue has displayed an unmatched level of caring for the young people of Pensacola. She is an arbitrator of the Juvenile Justice System working to straighten out young lives. She is active in the Big Brothers and Big Sisters of Escambia County and is a Classroom Facilitator for Junior Achievement. She also works with the United Way, the West Florida Regional Medical Center, the Pensacola Symphony, the chamber of commerce, and many other organizations.

It would take much longer than the time I have here, Madam Speaker, to list the number of Pensacola service organizations that have named Sue Straughn citizen of the year. It is an understatement to say Sue is well thought of by her fellow citizens.

Madam Speaker, It is a pleasure for me to recognize three great Americans, three great African-Americans today. The accomplishments of Emmitt, Roy, and Sue are an inspiration to northwest Floridians of all races as excellent role models. Their contributions have made our home town of Pensacola even better and have made us all very proud.

Mr. STOKES. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his contribution to this special order.

I am now pleased to yield to my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. CLYBURN].

Mr. CLYBURN. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Madam Speaker, I am pleased to join with my colleagues, the gentlewoman from Texas [Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON], the gentlewoman from Florida [Mrs. MEEK], the gentleman from Florida [Mr. HUTTO], the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. THOMPSON], and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PAYNE], as we call attention to the great contributions made to the overall growth and development of this great Nation by men and women of African-American descent.

Two weeks ago, on February 11, 1994, a space shuttle returned to Earth which included a Russian cosmonaut as a mission specialist, marking the first joint United States-Russian human space flight since the Apollo test project in 1975. In view of our celebration of Black History Month, I believe it appropriate to highlight the fact that the commander of that shuttle, Col. Charles F. Bolden, Jr., is an African-American from Columbia, SC, and grew up in what is now the Sixth Congressional District of South Carolina, which I am proud to represent.

Eight years ago, on January 28, 1986, we all watched in horror as the space shuttle Challenger exploded, 1 minute and 13 seconds after launch, with seven men and women aboard. One of the men, Dr. Ronald E. McNair, was an African-American.

Before Charles Bolden and Ron McNair were even born, Ernest Henderson became the first black man from the State of South Carolina to have a commercial pilot's license and hold ground instructor, flight instructor, and instrument ratings. At the Tuskegee flight school Mr. Henderson taught and trained an average of 20 cadets a year, who entered the famous 99th Pursuit Squadron which made history in World War II.

Madam Speaker, I point these three incidents out at this time because I think it is important for us to reflect upon a continuing custom among so many of our citizens to perpetuate policies and practices that limit the participation of certain segments of our society on account of ethnicity, socioeconomic background, and religious beliefs.

Not long ago, in October 1925, the Army War College prepared a report titled, "The Use of Negro Manpower in War." This report concluded that blacks were fair laborers but inferior technicians and fighters. It also stated that the cranial cavity of the Negro was much smaller than the white's, and that a Negro's brain weighed 35 ounces versus 45 ounces for whites.

Other studies concluded that blacks lacked patriotism, were untruthful, were difficult to discipline and train, and ran off in times of danger.

I believe, Madam Speaker, that the success of Charles Bolden, the tremendous sacrifice of Dr. Ronald McNair, the pioneering spirit of Ernest Henderson, and all of the other work by people like Dr. Mae Jemison, Dr. Bernard Harris, and many other people of color who are a part of our space shuttle program, point out the fallacy and viciousness of the 1925 report. I believe that it is high time for us to move to incorporate as one of our national education goals the true depiction of African-Americans for their historical and continued contributions to the overall development and growth of our Nation.

Madam Speaker, I would like to close my part in this program by recalling the words written by Martin Luther King, Jr., as he sat in the Birmingham City Jail after being arrested for calling attention to the problems of segregation in that city. Dr. King, as we may recall, wrote a letter in response to a letter that he had received from eight white clergymen asking him to leave Birmingham because they thought that he was a disruptive force in that community.

Dr. King read that letter, and the letter had something very interesting in it. They said to Dr. King, "Dr. King, we want you to understand that we know that your cause is right. We just feel that your timing is wrong." In his letter, Dr. King wrote about the neutrality of time. He responded that, "Time is neutral. It is never right and it is never wrong. Time is only what we make it."

Dr. King penned these words, which I want to share with our audience here today. Dr. King said, "I am beginning to believe that the people of ill will in our society make a much, much better use of time than the people of good will."

I believe that the time has come, Madam Speaker, for the people of good will in our society to make a much better use of time, and in so doing, help right the wrongs that are existing in so many of our textbooks.

Mr. STOKES. Madam Speaker, I thank my friend and colleague, the gentleman from South Carolina, for his excellent statement.

Madam Speaker, I am pleased now to yield to my friend and colleague, the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. THOMPSON].

Mr. THOMPSON. Madam Speaker, I stand today to pay tribute to a slain civil rights leader, the late Medgar Wiley Evers. After graduating from the public schools in Decatur, MS, he enlisted in the U.S. Army where he served in World War II. Upon returning from the Army, he then enrolled in Alcorn State University in Lorman, MS, where he earned a bachelor of science degree in business administration.

Medgar began his career as an insurance agent with the Magnolia Mutual Insurance Co. in Mound Bayou, MS. Thereafter, he moved to Jackson, MS, and became active with the Mississippi chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. In 1954, he was appointed field secretary of the Mississippi NAACP. Under Medgar's leadership, the NAACP advocated desegregation of public schools throughout Mississippi. In fact, he served as a plaintiff on behalf of his three children to desegregate the Jackson, MS, School System. In addition, he worked closely with NAACP lawyers in getting the first black student admitted to the University of Mississippi in 1962.

As the only full-time staff member of the Mississippi NAACP, Medgar devoted his life to fighting the injustices that plagued blacks in the State. He was actively involved in every major mass movement for social change in Mississippi from 1954 until his assassination in 1963.

I might add, Madam Speaker, that I had personal recollection of Medgar as an impressionable college student attending many of the mass meetings held by Medgar, and was really inspired by his love of humanity, the fact that not only did he serve his country in the military, but he also talked about the constitutional rights and privileges that should be guaranteed to all, regardless of race, creed, or color. It was in that spirit that, as a college student at Tusculum College, I recommitted myself to getting involved in the political process at an early age, and have continued ever since.

Medgar was instrumental in encouraging and registering blacks to vote. He also encouraged black customers to boycott merchants who perpetuated segregation. Even though Medgar strongly opposed racial violence, he was assassinated on a hot summer night in June 1963. This was a turning point in the civil rights movement, because it encouraged citizens and the Federal Government to increase their efforts in the area of human rights.

I might add, Madam Speaker, also that for 14 years I represented the community that Medgar lived in in Hinds County, MS, and I serve on the board of trustees of Tusculum College, who is the custodian of the Medgar Evers home now, which is now a landmark for African-Americans to visit when they come to Jackson, MS.

I think 2 weeks ago we sort of put a close to this very bad chapter in Mississippi's history. After 30 years and two mistrials, a third trail was held this year and a jury convicted the murderer of this husband, father, statesman, hero, and leader, Medgar Wiley Evers. I might add that many of us saw for the past 30 years how the person convicted bragged on the fact that he had deprived this wife of a husband and children of a father, and we complimented the prosecutors in producing that very convincing argument.

Last, in the spirit of Medgar Wiley Evers, we have filed a bill to name the post office in Jackson, MS, in his memory, and we look forward to an expeditious consideration of the naming of that facility.

Mr. STOKES. Madam Speaker, I certainly thank the gentleman for the great tribute he has paid to Medgar Evers. Also we might say that his wife, Myrlie Evers, has certainly been a great inspiration to all of us in this country.

I am pleased at this time to yield to the gentleman from Texas, Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON, a distinguished colleague and friend.

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding and for taking this time.

"Some organizations easily be recalled as forefront organizations that have played overt and well known roles in the battle for equality for Black Americans. However, there are others that play sufficient roles that have been organized by Black American Women. Three of them I'd like to cite tonight are Links, Inc., Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority, Inc. and Jack and Jill, Inc."

As we celebrate Black History Month, we are called to reflect upon those people, places, and events which played a significant role in shaping the past, present, and future of black Americans in this country. An integral part of this history are the activities and dedication of black civic organizations such as Links, Inc., Jack and Jill, and Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority, Inc. The late Reverend Dr. Martin Luther King once said, "Power is the ability to achieve purpose."

Contained within the purposes of these organizations are the improvement of the status of the race, the charge to improve the quality of life and provide hope for disadvantaged African-American citizens, and to ensure equal opportunities and advantages for all children. Each of these organizations are well grounded in their purposes. Each of these organizations have played key roles in the past and by purpose will continue to do so in the future.

Jack and Jill, Inc. and Jack and Jill Foundation was founded in 1938 in Philadelphia by a group of black women. Jack and Jill today boasts a membership of over 37,000 men, women, and children. Ms. Ella Louis Hudson, Dallas chapter founder with 220 chapters nationwide. Jack and Jill strives to create positive communities for young black children. It is charged with a multifaceted task, that of teaching our young children about who they are and who they can be, and also Jack and Jill is tasked with instilling the idea of responsibility and civic duty in the next generation of black leaders.

Alpha Kappa Alpha sorority has a membership of 140,000 of this Nation's brightest and talented young women. Mrs. Theresa Hicks and Mrs. Florence Harlee Phelps were the first golden girls. Alpha Kappa Alpha is dedicated to working to enhance the gifts of its individual members as well as improving their surrounding communities. The original black sorority with a long history of involvement in the suffrage and civil rights movements AKA's have shaped the world in which we live with a gracious cast of caring and commitment.

In 1946, a group of black women united to form one of the leading black civic organizations, Links. In Dallas, Mrs. Fannie Smith founded the Dallas Chapter. A small group, numbering slightly over 8,000, Links have toiled tirelessly in their communities to make opportunities available to blacks of all income levels. In 1954, the Links integrated children's theater audiences which were segregated right here in Washington, DC. Their commitment to social change remains alive today, in fundraising activities to benefit the United Negro College Fund, homeless people and projects to prevent drug abuse and teenage pregnancy.

There are 185,000 individuals dedicated to service and community. These networks have been the backbone of our communities uniting individuals from very different backgrounds for the purpose of making a better world. In 1994, we turn to these organizations because of their strategic positions within our communities make them uniquely qualified to address the state of siege we are under as black Americans.

Although 67 percent of blacks are not poor, we are disproportionately represented among the poor. One in four black children is born into poverty; 64 percent of our children are born out of wedlock. For the first time we are producing fewer Ph.D's than in previous years. Too many of our children are growing up with limited horizons—believing that if they live to 25 they are lucky. Our communities are besieged by crime yet the only solutions being proposed are more prisons to lock black children away for life.

What small victories we won during the civil rights movement are being stripped away from us as we speak. Individuals who claim that their rights are being infringed upon because they are represented in the U.S. Congress by black Americans are ignoring the 300-year history in which blacks were not even considered full human beings in this country much less entitled to the right to representation.

Black America is under siege and must mobilize all of its resources to deflect the multitude of attacks from within and without. Now is the time for us to work at the grassroots levels to say what we want to be the defining characteristics of our communities. We must work at the grassroots level to protect the hard fought gains of the civil rights movement. We must work to pull our children and the children of those less fortunate away from the forces which seek to stifle our brightest young minds. We must commit ourselves to maintaining the economic and political advances we made during the 1980's.

In 1940, A. Philip Randolph once said during a speech at the March on Washington Movement in Detroit, MI, "No organization can do everything. Every organization can do something and each organization is charged with the social responsibility to do that which it can, it is built to do."

Jack and Jill, AKA's, and Links are charged by their charters to bring people together to work for the betterment of the world in which we live. We are at a critical point in our history as black Americans, there is much work to be done. These organizations must be our sounding boards for problems and test-beds for solutions. If the full force of these organizations is mobilized to address just one of the many issues facing our communities today, we would see a notable change for the better in all of our communities and this Nation.

Mr. STOKES. Madam Speaker, I thank the distinguished gentlewoman from Texas for her contribution to this special order.

I am pleased to yield to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN], our friend and colleague who always participates each year in this special order.

Mr. GILMAN. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Madam Speaker, I am pleased to rise to join my colleagues in commemorating Black History Month for 1994 and I thank the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STOKES] for arranging the time for this special order.

As I have previously pointed out in this Chamber, the great Scottish historian Thomas Carlyle wrote that: "The history of the world is but the biography of great men." Black History Month is an appropriate time to commemorate the outstanding black men and women who have contributed so much to our Nation and to their own people throughout the years.

It is an appropriate time to remind our Nation's students about some of our early black heroes and leaders—that the first American to fall in defense of our independence in freedom, at the Boston Massacre which proved to be the opening skirmish in our Revolutionary War, was Crispus Attuckus, a free black man. Another valiant hero of the Battle of Bunker Hill was Peter Salem, who killed the British commander.

It is also an appropriate time to remind our young students that our beautiful Capital City of Washington, DC, was laid out by a black man, Benjamin Banneker, who was one of the most learned astronomers and mathematicians of his generation. Jean Baptiste Point du Sable, a black pioneer trader and trapper was the first settler in what is now known as Chicago, IL. Another early black pioneer was James P. Beckwourth, who explored northern California when that area was still an unknown wilderness.

The struggle to end slavery in our Nation is the story of many courageous men and women: Harriet Tubman and Sojourner Truth, who helped found and run the underground railroad; Frederick Douglass, an escaped slave who was perhaps the most articulate orator of his time; and the thousands upon thousands of Afro-Americans who fought and in many cases sacrificed their lives in the Civil War.

We should also remind our Nation of the numerous brilliant black people who have made the American way of life better in so many ways: Jan Matzeliger who invented the machinery which revolutionized the shoe industry; Henry Blair who invented corn and cotton planting machinery; and Granville T. Woods who invented the third rail used to power subway cars, and many safety devices which commuters use to travel on our subways and railways today.

And let us not overlook the significant contributions of Dr. Mary McCleod Bethune, Frederick D. Patterson, and Benjamin Mays who were outstanding educators who inspired not only their own students, but generations of students to come. A. Philip Randolph was one of our Nation's outstanding labor leaders, who worked with Bayard Rustin in organizing the marches on Washington in 1941 and 1963 which raised the consciousness of all Americans. Outstanding African-Americans who made their mark in the world of literature include Toni Morrison, last year's Nobel literature prize winner; Langston Hughes, Alice Walker, James Baldwin, Charles Fuller, Lorraine Hansberry, Paul Dunbar, Charles Gordone, and so many others.

And I have not even begun to list the many black Americans who made an impact in the fields of sports, entertainment, music, politics, the graphic arts, and so many other spheres of human endeavor.

Black History Month is an appropriate time for us to note that the contributions of blacks to our culture and our society are truly overwhelming. It is a time to note that our world would truly be different today were it not for the contributions of so many vital, giving men and women.

Madam Speaker, African-Americans have contributed to every facet of American life. It is extremely appropriate therefore that we join together in calling these significant accomplishments to the attention of all citizens of our Nation, both young and old.

Mr. STOKES. I thank my distinguished friend and colleague for his contribution to this special order.

Madam Speaker, I am pleased to yield to the gentlewoman from Florida [Ms. BROWN].

Mr. Simpson, born in 1914, was 79 years old when he died in Jacksonville, FL, last month. Mr. Simpson founded the weekly newspaper in April 1951 to report on news and developments of blacks in northeast Florida when other newspapers failed to report about blacks. When Simpson started the Florida Star, blacks were largely invisible; according to a recent news article, the only black faces were found in Ripley's Believe It Or Not.

In the 1950's, Simpson was heavily involved in registering blacks to vote. Simpson's paper featured stories attacking job discrimination, police brutality, segregation by the local bus company, and firefighters. Simpson alerted readers in northeast Florida to boycotts and sit-ins, including the 1960 Jacksonville Woolworth boycott where he was the only journalist present because white papers blacked out news of the event.

Mr. Simpson was a champion of civil rights and a pioneer of the black press in Florida; he was an advocate on behalf of people who suffered civil and social injustices. As we celebrate Black History Month, let's not forget the contributions of Eric Simpson, a real trailblazer.

Mr. STOKES. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman from Florida for her statement on this special order.

I am pleased now to yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PAYNE], our distinguished friend.

Mr. PAYNE of New Jersey. Madam Speaker, I join my colleagues in this celebration of Black History Month, a time when we, as African-Americans, remember our past and look with hope toward our future.

The African-American community has been blessed, in the past and the present, with countless men and women whose courage and fortitude has guided us through the most difficult of times.

We pause to honor heroes like the abolitionists Frederick Douglass and Harriet Tubman; the famous educator Booker T. Washington; Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall, and of course, Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. whose message of nonviolent change remains as relevant today as it was during his lifetime.

In addition to these legendary figures, there are unsung heroes and heroines working every day in our communities to bring positive change and hope to black Americans.

As we focus on our theme "Empowering Afro-American Organizations: Present and Future," I would like to take a moment to pay tribute to some of the leaders of organizations in my home State of New Jersey who are giving their time and talents to help empower their membership.

One of the foremost organizations of our time, the NAACP, grew out of the Niagara Movement in 1909. This movement was a coalition of African-American intellectuals who pressed for full citizenship rights.

During my youth, I had the privilege of being a member of the NAACP Youth Council and College Chapters of the Oranges and Maplewood. In 1957 I had the honor of being elected as the New Jersey president of the NAACP Youth Council and College Chapters of New Jersey. As State president, I had the good fortune of meeting Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., at the national convention of the NAACP in Detroit, MI, in 1957. Also, a great woman, Mrs. Madeline Williams, served as the adviser to the youth council and was a real leader for many of the youth, along with Mrs. Eloise Jett of Jersey City and Mrs. Pickney of Newark.

In New Jersey today, we are fortunate to have outstanding leadership at all levels of the NAACP as the organization works to meet the daunting challenges of the 1990's. Please join me in honoring our State president, Elaine Harrington; First Vice President Wandra Williams; Second Vice President Kabili Tayari; and our local presidents: Jacqueline Lawrence of Newark; Reverend Lyman Hines of Elizabeth; William Rutherford of Irvington; William Perkins of Jersey City; Morris Thomas of Maplewood and the Oranges; Albertus Jenkins of Montclair; John Robinson of Rahway; and in Linden, First Vice President and Former Councilman William Motley.

Another organization of great importance to the African-American community is the Urban League, which was founded in 1910. The league continues to pursue vigorously the goal of full and equal opportunities for all Americans, recognizing the crucial link between education and empowerment.

We have outstanding leadership in the Urban League of New Jersey: Lydia Barrett Davis in Essex County; Elnora Watson in Hudson County; and Ella Teal in Union County.

These dedicated individuals are working to improve economic opportunities and promote a better quality of life in our local communities.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to draw attention to the accomplishments of African-American law enforcement officers in my home State. Just a few decades ago, African-Americans were drastically underrepresented in the police force. There was bias in testing which prevented promising young people from being fairly considered for these positions. Many black communities were patrolled by an all-white police force with little attention to community relations.

In 1959, in response to this problem, a group of black police officers in Newark formed an organization called the Bronze Shields. Their first president was Floyd Bostick. They have worked to promote professionalism among African-American law enforcement officers and have also focused on community issues. Today, under the leadership of Detective Sheila Fitts, the group is continuing to make a positive contribution.

We also have a statewide group of law enforcement officers which was formed in the early 1950's. Known as the Batons, the group was originally composed of a coalition of African-American civil service workers in uniform, including postal employees. Today, under the guidance of their president, Ken Patterson, the organization works to promote the interests of New Jersey's African-American law enforcement officers and strives to better the communities they serve.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues in the House of Representatives to join me in saluting these outstanding representatives of African-American organizations who are working diligently each and every day to make a difference. As we celebrate Black History Month, I am glad to have this opportunity to thank all of them for a job well done and to tell them how proud I am of their accomplishments.

Mr. STOKES. I thank the gentleman for his contribution to the special order.

Madam Speaker, I yield to my distinguished colleague, the gentlewoman from North Carolina [Mrs. CLAYTON].

Mrs. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for allowing me to say that I want to lift up the name of one person and one organization.

I want to lift up the name of Floyd B. McKissick, in terms of economic development, and we certainly will tell more in the RECORD, because we recognize the limited time.

Also, I want to recognize the untiring efforts in economic development of community development corporations in my district who are beginning to emerge as the new frontier for human services and for economic parity within the black community.

Both of those, I think, in terms of the individual and the organization should be expounded on, and I congratulate them both.

Mr. STOKES. Madam Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WATT].

Mr. WATT. Madam Speaker, I am delighted to be here and participate in the Black History Month celebration and take this opportunity to do something that I have wanted to do for a long time.

I thought it would be fitting today to read some of the words of George H. White, our last Representative in the last century from North Carolina. This is from his final speech, January 29, 1901, and I wish I had the opportunity to read it all. I keep threatening to do my own special order to come to read the entire speech, but I would not dare try to even do that tonight. But I do want to read two particular parts which seem to have particular bearing on where we are today.

One has to do with the commitment of black people to move forward.

George H. White had these words to say on June 29, 1901:

> You may tie us, and then taunt us for a lack of bravery, but one day we will break the bonds. You may use our labor for two and a half centuries and then taunt us for our poverty, but let me remind you that we will not always remain poor. You may withhold even the knowledge of how to read God's word and learn the way from earth to glory and then taunt us for our ignorance, but we would remind you that there is plenty of room at the top, and we are climbing.

Then finally, as he bid farewell to this body, the Congress, as the last black Representative in Congress at that time, and to be the last black Representative for over 30 years thereafter, he made this prediction, which rings true today:

> This, Mr. Chairman, is perhaps the negroes' temporary farewell to the American Congress; but let me say, Phoenix-like he will rise up some day and come again. These parting words are in behalf of an outraged, heart-broken, bruised, and bleeding, but God-fearing people, faithful, industrious, loyal people—rising people, full of potential.

With those words, he parted from this Congress, and I find it very appropriate that I would be here saying those words as one of the two replacements of George H. White after more than 90 years. And also that presiding over this Chamber would be my fellow colleague, the gentlewoman from North Carolina [Mrs. CLAYTON], both of whom having joined this body as replacements for George H. White.

Mr. MFUME. Madam Speaker, Black History Month was created to acknowledge the achievements of great African-American individuals and institutions and their role in the history of the United States.

Today, we honor America's Afro-American organizations and we ask the question: How can we empower these organizations now and in the future.

We have a long history of empowering organizations in the African-American community and the success of many of these groups has paralleled the progress our community has made in achieving civil rights and liberation.

Whether it's the NAACP, the Urban League, the Rainbow Coalition, or the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, the African-American community has often looked to these organizations for strength and leadership during the numerous battles we have fought for equality and dignity. The voice of the community has often been articulated through our national and local organizations and we have looked to them to lift us up as a people.

While the battle for civil rights is hardly over, the African-American community is now faced with a larger battle for survival. While the needs of our people have grown, the Government's response has weakened, thus leaving our community organizations to pick up the pieces and bear new and daunting burdens.

The state of the black community is indeed critical. While hope is high the challenges and threats are dangerous. The scourge of AIDS, crack, and crime continue to tear at the rich fabric of our culture and threaten the black male with annihilation.

Racism, bigotry, and violence lie terribly close to the surface of our Nation's consciousness threatening to erupt at any moment. The Rodney King riots demonstrated that justice denied or tensions ignored only compound the crisis.

We need leadership from the White House to counter the forces of ignorance. We need a Marshall Plan in the African-American community to pull our resources and find solutions. We need the support of all Americans of good conscience to join us and work together in understanding and appreciation of our cultural differences and similarities.

Ultimately it is our African-American organizations that we will look to now and in the future for the solutions we seek. It is in our national, State, local, and neighborhood groups that the real agenda for black America will be melded and refined.

We must provide these groups with the resources, time, energy, muscle, and prayer that will revitalize our community. We cannot count on the fair-weather friendship of governments, political parties, or programs. However, we can rely on ourselves and our community institutions.

For it is in ourselves that we will find our destiny and strength to build a new tomorrow. It is in ourselves that we will discover our richness and wealth as individuals, as a community, and as a people. And it is in ourselves that we will find a way to stop the fighting and start the healing.

So today as a people, as a community, as a race, and as Americans we rededicate our energy to the community organizations that seek to root out racism, facilitate black liberation, heal our community, and build the foundations of the future.

Today we lift these organizations up with our words, works and gifts and look to them for guidance and leadership for the next millennium.

Mr. FAZIO. Madam Speaker, I am pleased to join my colleagues once again to honor the historical contributions of Black America and to commemorate Black History Month.

The celebration of Black History Month began in 1926, when Dr. Carter G. Woodson first conceived the idea of a week dedicated to the observation of black history. The celebration of Black History Month is fostered by the valuable contributions that African-Americans have made and continue to make to this country. Black History Month allows us all to recognize the importance of our heritage and understand that much more work has yet to be done.

Madam Speaker, because the 1994 theme of Black History Month is Empowering African-American Organizations, I cannot help but cite the outstanding job that Mr. Kevin Johnson, all-star guard for the Phoenix Suns, has done in Sacramento with the creation of his St. Hope Academy for young people. I believe that St. Hope represents the very essence of community empowerment. St. Hope is an after school facility located in the middle of a predominantly African-American neighborhood which is plagued by high crime, high unemployment, and a high dropout rate. St. Hope is a safe place where young children and teenagers can go after school and on the weekends to study and learn new skills. It is a place that is equipped with new computers, tutors, and counselors to guide and discuss issues that are important to the young people. More importantly though, the academy helps provide self confidence, a sense of self esteem, and leadership to the children of this neighborhood. The efforts and contributions by Kevin Johnson to the African-American community embody exactly what is right with America and how empowered organizations can benefit our communities.

The history and culture of black America have always played an important role in the development of the United States and I am honored to participate once again in the observation of Black History Month. I also would like to commend the distinguished gentleman from Maryland, Mr. MFUME, chairman of the Congressional Black Caucus; and the distinguished gentleman from Ohio, Mr. STOKES, for calling this special order, and I thank them both for including me in this effort.

Mr. ENGEL. Madam Speaker, I rise today to honor the innumerable achievements and contributions of African-Americans in the history and in the development of our Nation. African-American businesses and organizations, both past and present, have laid the groundwork for many innovative and essential institutions.

My home State of New York has long been an academic and cultural center, due in large part to the talents of its diverse community. African-American doctors, lawyers, judges, educators, entertainers, politicians, and many others have helped empower individuals and provided leadership to the whole Nation.

The 17th District, which I represent in Congress, includes several African-American organizations and businesses that are vital to communities in the Bronx, Yonkers, Mount Vernon, New Rochelle, and Pelham. They provide essential services that ensure fair housing opportunities, provide medical and counseling services, educate our youth, and care for the elderly and infirmed. Most of the organizations had meager beginnings, starting as volunteer organizations under the leadership of one or two exceptional African-Americans.

These organizations have and continue to play a paramount role in providing role models and employment opportunities where they may not have existed before.

I would also be remiss if I did not mention my friends and colleagues in the Congressional Black Caucus, who work so hard to promote issues of concerns to the African-American community. I am proud to find myself standing side-by-side with the caucus when it comes time to fight for progressive and innovative policies.

So at the same time we celebrate the historic figures in African-American History, we should also pay tribute to the local heroes who contribute so much to the day-to-day successes taking place throughout the Nation. In particular, I want to extend my appreciation to the organizations and businesses in the Bronx and Westchester County that draw on the diversity of our communities as a source of strength. They give us reason to believe that the future will be filled with many more of the inspirational moments we celebrate during Black History Month.

Mr. LAZIO. Madam Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise today to commemorate February as Black History Month. For the last 18 years, February has been the official observance of Black History Month which helps all Americans appreciate the numerous significant accomplishments that African-Americans have made in all aspects of American life.

America would not be the great country it is today without the contributions of African-Americans. From communications to politics, from science to sports African-Americans have excelled to the pinnacle of their chosen fields.

Many accomplished African-Americans are from, or strongly associated with my home State of New York. Time does not permit me to mention all of them, but I would like to highlight the careers of three such individuals.

Lewis H. Latimer, a noted inventor, scientist, and resident of Long Island, invented and patented an incandescent light bulb with a carbon filament in 1881. Later, while working for the Edison Co., he supervised the installation of the electric light system in New York, Philadelphia, Montreal, and London. Mr. Latimer also made patented drawings of the first telephone for Alexander Graham Bell.

Another New Yorker, Isabel Baumfree, later known as Sojourner Truth, is well known for her speeches against slavery and in favor of women's rights. Born a slave in 1797, and after being freed by the New York State Emancipation Act of 1843, she became the first African-American woman to speak publicly against slavery. After being freed she crossed the country speaking out at abolition rallies.

In 1947, when he joined the Brooklyn Dodgers, Jackie Robinson became the first African-American to play major-league baseball. Jackie distinguished himself as one of baseball's all-time greats by compiling a long list of accomplishments including: Rookie of the Year in 1947, Most Valuable Player in the National League in 1949, and a lifetime .311 batting average. Most importantly, his entrance into the game paved the way for other African-American players to play major league baseball. In 1962, he was inducted into the Baseball Hall of Fame.

As we celebrate the accomplishments of African-Americans this month it is important to realize that what African-Americans have accomplished should not solely be heralded in relation to race. This celebration should not only highlight accomplishments of African-Americans, it should make clear the vital importance that these accomplishments have made to American society as a whole.

In a time when the basic American family structure is in decline and violence is a part of everyday life, our Nation's youth need role models to follow. Children need to look no further than the names I have just mentioned to find great American role models who have defined the American spirit by beating the odds and standing up for what they believe.

Mr. PRICE of North Carolina. Madam Speaker, Black History Month is a time to highlight the many contributions African-Americans have made and are making to our great Nation. I appreciate Mr. STOKES' and Mr. Mfume's organizing of this special order to pay particular tribute to Afro-American organizations. Groups at work in my district in North Carolina—such as the NAACP, the Raleigh-Wake Citizens Association, and the Martin Luther King Celebration Committee—continue to make a major contribution to our community.

Tonight I want to take special notice of a unique organization in my district: Strengthening the Black Family, Inc. Initially organized in 1980 as the Black Family Conference, Strengthening the Black Family, Inc. is a nonprofit coalition of local groups working to help families and neighborhoods help themselves. It holds an annual conference to increase awareness of community issues affecting all families with a special emphasis on African-American families. The conference includes workshops on topics such as leadership development, health promotion, youth development, and organizational support. For the record I will include a complete list of the 32 sponsoring organizations for 1993.

Strengthening the Black Family, Inc. also helps provide community service through projects like the Teens Against AIDS Project and the Southeast Raleigh Center for Community Health and Development, a cooperative effort with the Wake County Health Department, the UNC-Chapel Hill School of Public Health, and other local health organizations to develop a community-operated center in southeast Raleigh to meet a range of health needs.

Mr. Speaker, the diversity and shared commitment of its sponsoring organizations gives Strengthening the Black Family its vigor. This organization and many others like it across the Nation are making a major contribution to an improved quality of life for many of our citizens. I salute the work of Strengthening the Black Families, Inc. and related groups in my district, and I encourage my colleagues to recognize those in their own areas who work similarly for community betterment.

Ms. FURSE. Madam Speaker, the message has come from around the Nation; it has been delivered loud and clear from African-Americans who know. The message is that it's vital that young African-American men have role models, mentors, and leaders in their own community. They need to see that there is hope for their future, and that there are alternatives to guns, gangs, violence, and drugs. It is only then that we can hope to stem the violence, destruction, and disillusion of so many people's lives.

I'm pleased to stand here today and honor Portland Police Chief Charles Moose, the first African-American police chief for the city of Portland. He is a strong advocate of programs that highlight youths, gang prevention, education, and community policing. He is known by name by many people in the community. He is a man who still walks the beat and stays in touch with people in their neighborhoods.

But Chief Moose is more than just head of a large metropolitan police force in my home district. He also leads by example. When he was promoted to the top slot at the bureau, he could have moved to the suburbs and avoided problems that often plague cities, like decay, hopelessness, violence, and crime. But Chief Moose made a commitment to the city and to the people of Portland. He moved into the heart of the African-American community. He wanted to send the message loud and clear that people, especially young African-American men, could rise above their surroundings and accomplish great things. Despite the heavy demands of the police bureau, he found time to complete his masters and his doctorate degrees.

Chief Moose is a man worthy of honor, and we all benefit from the role he serves in our community. And while he leads by example, I call upon other African-Americans in my home district in Oregon to stand up and become a mentor for a young man—just help one man grow to stand taller in our community. There is no greater reward or gift than giving hope to a young person. And I believe that being a mentor should extend beyond Black History Month. Chief Moose delivers the message effectively that our children deserve year-round attention.

Miss COLLINS of Michigan. Madam Speaker, as we commemorate Black History Month, I want to recognize the millions of African-Americans who never make the headlines. Their hard work and perseverance are displayed every day.

It can be seen in the single black mother, struggling against unprecedented odds to raise her children without a husband. It can be seen in the black business executive, striving to overcome overt and covert racism. And it can be seen in the life of the black teenager, who wants to succeed in school in the face of drugs, violence, and racism.

I want to discuss the lessons we can learn from the struggles of two African-Americans who had all the cards stacked against them, yet persevered for the betterment of themselves, the betterment of all African-Americans, and the betterment of our Nation.

Harriet Tubman was born a slave in 1820. But Harriet Tubman enjoyed what was considered a privilege for blacks of her time, and is again increasingly rare today: An intact and functioning family. While she and her family were subject to the orders of their owner and hired out to neighboring farmers, they were a family unit in which care and support was given and received and in which religion and folklore were shared. She learned to trust herself, God, and Divine Providence, in that order.

It is difficult today to understand the forces aligned against Harriet Tubman. She was an enslaved African-American. She was a woman living in a man's world. And after receiving a malicious blow to her head by an overseer, she suffered a form of sleeping sickness, often falling asleep involuntarily. This meant that literacy, respect, and even common courtesy were denied her. And yet this remarkable woman came to understand the social order that enslaved her. In 1849, she escaped to freedom in Pennsylvania alone and unaided.

She began supporting herself, vowing to free her relatives. Becoming associated with another great African-American, William Still, Harriet Tubman began her legendary career as a conductor on the Underground Railroad, where she was fearless and willing to endure any hardship. It is said that Harriet Tubman carried a revolver on her side and made the slaves pledge that they would not turn back once they began the journey on the Underground Railroad.

She took the sanctification of this Nation upon her narrow shoulders, becoming involved with abolitionists, feminists, and political and military leaders. She worked with people who shared her goal of the emancipation of blacks, regardless of the boundaries of gender, color, and socioeconomic status.

When the Civil War broke out, Tubman served 3 years in South Carolina under Union Gen. David Hunter first as a nurse, later as a scout and spy. And when her lifelong goal of legal emancipation was finally realized, Harriet Tubman did not even look up. She continued to fight for true emancipation by raising funds for schools for former slaves and struggled on in the suffragist movement.

Harriet Tubman is an inspiration for us all. She fought against what she knew to be wrong, even when the forces that she fought must have seemed unbeatable. Yet in the true American spirit, she had a vision and fought the good fight.

For another African-American hero, we Detroiters need look no further than former Mayor Coleman Young. A man who always stood for principle, even in the face of overwhelming resistance and opposition, Coleman Young always persevered.

While Coleman Young had the good fortune to learn the value of hard work and organization at his father's knee, racial discrimination marred Young's childhood. When he graduated from high school, his color closed the door to financial aid at the University of Michigan and other colleges despite his exceptional academic record. Later, he was passed over for a job with an automobile company because of his race.

Despite these obstacles, like Harriet Tubman, Coleman Young decided to take on the unjust system. He began to organize labor in the automobile industry, fighting for the rights of black workers.

As a second lieutenant and a bombardier-navigator in World War II, he remained an adamant defender of the rights of African-Americans. Near the end of the war he and about 100 other black officers were arrested for demanding service in a segregated officers' club in Indiana.

Coleman Young's work on behalf of blacks brought him to the attention of the infamous House Un-American Activities Committee. Called to testify before that committee in 1952 as a leader of the National Negro Labor Council, he refused to answer the chairman's questions and temporarily withdrew from organizing labor, telling the committee, "You have mixed me up with a stool pigeon." Coleman Young was displaying the independence and stubbornness that came to typify his struggle for racial equity.

Coleman Young then entered politics, and seeing a system badly in need of fixing in the wake of the devastating 1967 Detroit riots, Coleman Young emerged from a crowded field of candidates to become Detroit's first black mayor in 1973.

At that point, the challenges facing Coleman Young were staggering: Racial disharmony in Detroit was high, the police force had become a brutal occupying army, and the city was on the verge of becoming an economic wasteland.

Coleman Young served as mayor for 20 years, dismantling the walls of exclusion brick by brick. He made city hall accessible to people who were not welcome there before—African-Americans, the working class, and women. Not merely granting access to members of these disenfranchised groups, Coleman Young elevated them to high positions in his administration. For the first time, ability determined how far careers could go, not race, gender, or station in life.

Meanwhile, he strived to revitalize a city that had been given up for dead. By forging a working partnership with businesses, he endeavored to revitalize the waterfront with the jewel of Detroit, the Renaissance Center. Constantly battling budget deficits and Federal neglect, Coleman Young kept Detroit running on eight cylinders for 20 years.

As African-Americans, we should look to the unflagging perseverance and courage shown by these two African-Americans as models.

We can also learn valuable lessons from their lives—the need for family, the value of self-reliance, the importance of persistence, and the rich rewards of hard work. As I look across America today, I can see the new Harriet Tubmans, the new Coleman Youngs, in the face of every African-American who struggles to succeed in a society which, despite our best efforts, is still weighted against them. So during this Black History Month, I stand here to honor all African-Americans, those in the headlines and those in the breadlines.

Mr. DE LUGO. Madam Speaker, February is the month we set aside to commemorate Black History, when we celebrate the accomplishments of a few well-known men and women, recognize the achievements of others who are less well-known, and observe the extraordinary chronicle of all African-Americans, past and present.

Today, I want to particularly acknowledge some of the remarkable successes and lasting legacies of the people of the Virgin Islands, men and women whom I have been proud to represent in this House for almost 20 years, people who have made many important contributions to the West Indian, American, and African-American experiences.

The Virgin Islands people have achieved a number of firsts in black history.

Fifteen years before President Abraham Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation in 1863 that led to the abolition of slavery in the United States, that terrible institution at last came to an end in the Virgin Islands.

On March 26, 1937, William H. Hastie was confirmed as judge of the Federal District Court of the Virgin Islands and became the first African-American to be appointed to the Federal bench in the United States.

On May 18, 1946, Judge Hastie became the first African-American Governor of the Virgin Islands and, therefore, the first African-American Governor in American history.

Governor Hastie initiated an active campaign to increase self-government in the Virgin Islands. As my colleagues know, increased self-government for the people of the Virgin Islands and all the insular areas has been one of my foremost goals during my tenure in the House.

In September 1950, the Virgin Islands Legislative Assembly strengthened its Antidiscrimination Act and adopted one of the strongest civil rights bills under the American flag.

In November 1970, Melvin H. Evans was chosen the first elected Governor of the Virgin Islands and thereby became the first elected African-American Governor under the American flag.

In January 1981, Senator Ruby Margaret Rouss was elected President of the Virgin Islands Legislature and became the first African-American woman to be elected president of the executive branch of government in the United States.

Madam Speaker, these accomplishments are significant events in African-American history, and they are important contributions to the history of the United States. They are illustrations of the tremendous talent and ability that springs from the Virgin Islands and its people, people who have written important chapters in the annals of black history.

Mr. MANN. Madam Speaker, when I thought about this year's theme for the special order on Black History Month, "Empowering African-America Organizations: Present and Future," I could not help but think of all of the men and women who have paved the way for many African-Americans of the present. This year, I would like to pay tribute to 20 members of the First District of Ohio. Their accomplishments and contributions were recently honored by the Urban League of Greater Cincinnati's First Heritage Award. This year's theme "Glorifying the Lion," is taken from the African proverb "Until the lions have their own historians, tales of hunting will always glorify the hunter." This year's lions are.

For many of these Cincinnati seniors this honor is long overdue. Each of the lions has contributed over 30 years of service to Cincinnati's communities. The word "lion" symbolizes characteristics like strength, nobility, greatness, and fearlessness. These lions have demonstrated all of these qualities during the course of their lives and have served as leaders during times that were not always easy. Many honored have had a career of firsts; the first black doctors, the first black lawyers, the first black educators, entrepreneurs, publishers, and politicians. Others were social workers, engineers, and religious leaders. All worked to improve human relations and fought for civil rights. Empowering African-American organizations has been a major part of their life's work, as well as contributing to our communities on a whole; and for that, I would like to congratulate and thank them. We can not look to African-Americans of the present and future without first looking to those who, through their distinguished service, have laid a strong foundation, and because of their efforts have improved the quality of life for all citizens of the First District of Ohio and throughout the United States.

Mr. HOYER. Madam Speaker, I am proud to join my colleagues today to commemorate Black History Month. Particularly, Madam Speaker, I would like to thank the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. LOUIS STOKES, for requesting this special order today. Black History Month is a time of reflection and honor.

During Black History Month, we recall and pay tribute to the towering achievements and inspiring contributions that African-Americans have made to this country. This month provides us with the opportunity to intertwine the notable accomplishments of African-Americans into this Nation's fabric.

Madam Speaker, this is the time when, we honor those men and women who influenced, shaped, and altered American life, culture, and politics—those who believed in a democracy that would not tolerate prejudice and discrimination, those who fought brutal injustice with the power of mortal truth. These brave soldiers I speak of are Frederick Douglas, born a slave on Maryland's Eastern Shore, who became one of America's most influential diplomats and journalists during the 19th century.

Harriet Tubman, born in Dorchester County in 1820, who escaped slavery to become the Moses of her people and delivered hundreds of men, women, and children from bondage.

Justice Thurgood Marshall, raised in Baltimore, who became the first African-American Associate Justice to the U.S. Supreme Court after a career as a brilliant trial attorney, director of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People Legal Defense and Educational Fund, and solicitor General for the United States.

Madam Speaker, we must also thank W.E.B. DuBois, Booker T. Washington, Gwendolyn Brooks, Maya Angelou, Langston Hughes, and John Baldwin who through their writings and teachings have enabled all of America to appreciate the African-American legacy, past struggles and present dreams. We pay tribute to America's sport's heroes such as Arthur Ashe, the great activist and renowned humanitarian, who inspired all with his courage. We honor the scientists and educators, who labored so hard to overcome the racial barriers in our society and proved that America could not afford to squander the talent and knowledge of African-Americans. We recall the words of some of our Nation's most revered ministers and theologians, such as Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. who braved the wrath of society, to change that society to fit the principles it espoused but did not practice.

Madam Speaker, the struggles which were overcome and the accomplishments achieved by African-Americans in the past have paved the way for present African-American leadership and involvement.

Today, there is a record number of African-Americans serving at all levels of government.

My former colleague, Mike Espy is the first African-American Secretary of Agriculture, Hazel O'Leary is the first African-American woman to serve as the Secretary of Energy, Ron Brown, the first black chairman of the Democratic National Committee became the Secretary of Commerce, and the Department of Veterans' Affairs is under the leadership of Jesse Brown.

Last year, the American voters elected 16 African-Americans to the U.S. House of Representatives.

Moreover, the voters of Illinois made CAROL MOSELEY-BRAUN, the first African-American woman to be elected to the U.S. Senate.

Madam Speaker, Black History Month has a broader significance. It is a critical prism through which to view America's history overall. Our examination of this history is both painful and shameful, but is also essential.

Only in this way can we appreciate the importance of this country's ability to redress past injustices.

Only with awareness of past wrongs can we define our future as one in which the right to live with dignity and free from persecution will be accorded by all Americans.

Madam Speaker, only with the knowledge of our heritage and the conviction that we are indeed a nation of people endowed by their creator with certain inalienable rights, can we practice the teachings of those whose legacy we remember today.

Madam Speaker, again, I want to thank Congressman LOUIS STOKES for allowing me to participate in this special order.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Madam Speaker, in honor of Black History Month I am pleased to commend two outstanding persons, Ms. Aminah Hazelwood and Mr. Walter Barnes who live and work in the third district which I am privileged to represent. They are perfect examples and positive role models for all to emulate.

The YMCA Black Achievers Organization had its beginnings in Harlem back in 1971. The program is designed to put African-American youths in touch with adult mentors so that they can have a ready resource for educational, career, and life choices. Since the program came to Louisville and Jefferson County in 1980 over 15,000 youths have moved through the program. Currently, 1,100 are involved.

Aminah Hazelwood is a senior at Louisville Male High School in Louisville, KY. She was honored recently by the YMCA's black achievers as the Youth Achiever of the Year. And, to those who know her well, this accomplishment comes as no surprise.

Aminah's mother, Karen Hazelwood, has been involved in the Black Achievers Program for several years, and set an excellent example for her daughter, who followed that example by becoming president of the junior Black Achievers.

For Aminah, involvement with the junior group gave her a matchless chance to learn more about her culture, to gain pride and self-esteem as well. Using these characteristics and skills, Aminah ran for and won the post of student president at Male High School. She is the first female African-American senate president.

The Black Achievers' Adult Achiever of the Year is Walter Barnes. He has been the heart and soul of the Chestnut Branch of the YMCA for many years and a man to whom the young people who use the Y's facilities turn to for advice, counsel and, at times, consolation. Walter has been heavily involved in the Black Achievers Program from its start in Louisville in 1980.

Mr. Barnes is committed to giving kids all the chances and opportunities they need to succeed. He is serving in his 40th year with the YMCA's Chestnut Street Branch. Throughout this time, he has stressed the need for inner-city kids to work on their whole person in order to have a real shot at life.

I ask my colleagues to join me in offering congratulations to Aminah Hazelwood and Walter Barnes for their achievements and for being examples to us all.

Mr. TOWNS. Madam Speaker, today, I rise to join my colleagues in our annual salute to Black History Month. In our celebration of the contributions and achievements of African-Americans, we recognize the overlooked, applaud those pushed aside, and hear the accounts of our people that history has chosen to ignore; because on this day we salute the achievements of African-Americans.

I want to take the opportunity to thank my colleague from Ohio for creating a historical precedent by assuring that each year this distinguished body sets aside some time to seriously consider the many and varied contributions and achievements of African-Americans. I am pleased that our focus this year is on black groups and organizations. It is particularly appropriate because the only black groups that the media seems to recognize are gangs and singing groups. But we know that the black community has developed strong, vital, positive professional and social organizations which serve to inspire, develop, and propel the improvement of the community and the Nation.

One such group, which I am here to speak about today, is the National Council of Negro Women. Founded in 1935, by educator and human rights activist Mary McLeod Bethune, the National Council of Negro Women is the Nations' most broad-based organization of African-American women. Founded with the idea of harnessing the great power of a million women into a force for constructive action, this non-profit voluntary service organization has 34 national affiliated organizations and 250 community-based sections. Through this impressive network, the council touches issues and raises the concerns of over 4 million women.

As an organization of organizations the council is much more than a clearinghouse. It has managed to translate its mission of assistance, advocacy, and action into an agenda of national programs which disseminate information about social, political, and economic issues which affect the well-being of African-American women and their families including: Promoting healthy lifestyles through projects on healthy behaviors and disease prevention; developing community empowerment and self-help programs; and fostering programs on self-sufficiency, economic development, and entrepreneurship.

Most Americans are familiar with the council through its annual Black Family Reunion. Beginning in 1986, the council has held the reunion in seven cities. More than an opportunity to picnic, the Black Family Reunion is a celebration of traditional African-American values. An example of those values of love, hope, faith, harmony, education, dignity, and confidence was engraved on the base of a statute honoring the council's founder, the late Mary McLeod Bethune statute. Through its booths and seminars, the council distributes and reiterates this message every year to millions of black Americans.

This important weekend devoted to restating the traditional values of African-Americans was the brainchild of Dr. Dorothy Height, current president of the National Council of Negro Women.

Trained as a social worker, Dr. Height began her career in social service and government while a caseworker for the New York welfare department. In that capacity, she was the first black American named to deal with the Harlem riots of 1935 and became a leader of the national youth movement. During this time, Height, the social worker became Height the civil rights advocate. She worked to prevent lynching, desegregate and Armed Forces, reform the criminal justice system, and open public accommodations to all people.

This early experience of caring and working laid a firm foundation for the woman who would become fourth president of the National Council of Negro Women. With Dr. Height at the mantle, the National Council of Negro Women has achieved tax-exempt status, developed model national programs, and opened a new era of historical scholarship focusing on the achievements of black women. On this day, I rise to recognize Dr. Dorothy Height and the National Council of Negro Women.

Mr. FILNER. Madam Speaker, and my colleagues, I am pleased to join you today in honoring the African-American community and its rich history through the observance of Black History Month. Throughout this month, we hail the numerous achievements of African-Americans within American society—and in doing so we counter the pervasive stereotypes that pull at our Nation's fabric.

In 1961, I served a jail sentence in the Mississippi State Penitentiary for my commitment to the principle of equality. As a foot soldier in the civil rights movement, I know the value of education—and that's what Black History Month is all about. During this month, we celebrate the intellectual and technical contributions that this Nation has gained from its African-American citizens.

Through Black History Month, many people will learn of the strides that African-Americans have made toward equality. We applaud this continual struggle toward the principles set forth in our Constitution that "all men (and women) are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, that among them are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." Although we have struggled with making this a reality for all Americans, we must continue to work together to make the American Dream available to all.

This month praises the work of many distinguished African-Americans that we all know, such as the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., Rosa Parks, George Washington Carver, and Benjamin Banneker.

But this month also recognizes other African-Americans, whose contributions are equally heroic, but whose names may not be as well known. Let me give you one example: Dr. Shirley Weber, a member of the board of education in my home of San Diego, CA.

Twenty years ago, she helped to develop a black studies department at San Diego State University and has spent 9 years as the chair of that department. Dr. Weber continues her fight for better education for all students as a member of the San Diego School Board—which sets policy for the sixth biggest school system in the Nation. Over the past 5 years, the dropout rate has been reduced by 50 percent in San Diego schools, largely due to the efforts of Dr. Shirley Weber. The daughter of a sharecropper, she has enriched the lives of thousands of our young people.

Black History Month commemorates the struggles of all the Dr. Shirley Webers to break through racial intolerance and social and economic barriers, and their perseverance in making a better life for ourselves and our children.

I am also privileged to have a special African art exhibit in my district this month, entitled "Songs of My People." This display, which has traveled nationwide, is an inspirational self-portrait of the African-American community. I am proud to have the honor of hosting such an important presentation at the San Diego Museum of Art—and I am thrilled that Congressman KWEISI MFUME, chairman of the Congressional Black Caucus, will be helping us kick off this important exhibit.

But this month is only symbolic. We must continue to fight for equal rights and opportunities for all Americans, no matter what the month. We must keep on keeping on.

Mr. CLAY. Madam Speaker as we observe Black History Month, black Americans should take particular pride in their race, their culture, and their contributions to the development of humankind. Too many black Americans don't realize the importance and significance of recalling past struggles and achievements and relating those efforts to present day conditions. Pausing to assess our role in society and to remember our contributions to its development are as valid today as they were in 1926 when Carter G. Woodson, a renowned historian, first introduced Negro History Week. Many remember that this was a week beginning on February 12, the birthday of the "great emancipator," Abraham Lincoln, and ending on the birthday of the "great abolitionist," Frederick Douglass. The underlying purpose was then, and is now, to make known the important contributions black Americans have made to the advancement of this Nation.

When the subject of why we celebrate Black History Month arises, some ask—Are we not all Americans? Are not black people a part of American history? Why do we need a day to honor Dr. Martin L. King or a month to highlight the contributions of blacks to America? Those usually asking these questions are the same individuals who have no problem engaging in festivities extolling their own ethnic heritage and cultural background.

It took members of the Congressional Black Caucus 15 years to convince a majority of the Congress to set aside a day of honor for Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., Nobel Peace Prize winner, crusader for human decency and racial equality—the greatest champion for social justice in the history of this Nation. Somehow many in Congress felt that naming a holiday for Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., would be an affront to their sense of shared values and democratic principles.

Racist individuals and attitudes made the advent of black history celebrations absolutely essential. One of the primary reasons that racism is so pervasive, so ingrained, and so readily embraced by many people is that they lack sufficient knowledge about the struggles, the sacrifices, the efforts of blacks to become an integral part of American society. Consciously or subconsciously, black Americans are victims of those historians, theologians, educators, entrepreneurs, and others who distorted or ignored the role played by enterprising courageous blacks in the development of this great country.

The omissions and distortions were deliberate, calculated and widespread and were part of a massive conspiracy engaged in by public officials, religious leaders, scholars, teachers, publishers, and writers. Their mission was to justify one of the cruelest forms of human slavery in the history of mankind. Black people suffered the indignities of debilitating de facto human slavery for 200 years and another 100 years of legally imposed racial separation. In order for false Christians to soothe their consciences and keep faith with the teachings of the Holy Bible, it was necessary to provide moral justification for these perverse and abominable human practices.

Simply put, the so-called moral justification which hypocritical Christians used to enslave blacks was that black folk had no souls and were not candidates for conversion and had no rights or privileges Christians needed to respect.

It has only been within the last 30 years that anything vaguely resembling the truth has surfaced to challenge and replace the mythology which is passed off as American history. However, despite slavery, despite lynchings, despite illiteracy, and despite poverty, black Americans have come a long way.

And yet as we proclaim victory over bondage and legal oppression we know that much remains to be done. Conditions of homelessness, joblessness, teenage pregnancy, absent fathers, high infant mortality, kids killing kids, and mental and physical illness abound.

In responding to these challenges, we must instill in our people a proper appreciation for engagement in the affairs of the community. We must dispel the notion held by many young people that gives glorification to negative forces in society. We must also teach our children an appreciation for the virtues and the values that enabled their forebearers to endure the debilitating hardships of slavery and yet be able to meet the challenges of their day.

In so doing, let us not join the chorus of those who would denigrate and disparage us and others. Above all, let us discard the myths about black Americans which only serve to limit upward mobility. Let us instead strive to move to higher ground. One way to do this is to constantly remind ourselves and others of the great contributions blacks have made and continue to make to this Nation.

Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA. Madam Speaker, thank you for the opportunity this afternoon to speak in support of this year's congressional recognition of Black History Month.

I frequently hear complaints from citizens who indicate that ceremonies and other forms of cultural recognition such as those which honor the proud heritage of today's African-Americans, Hispanic-Americans, or Native Americans are a waste of time and money. In response, I want to reiterate the importance of traditional activities of the nature of this special order, and other activities taking place this month throughout the Nation.

For too long the history taught in this country was very one-sided. Students read, studied and talked about a group of individuals now referred to by some as "dead white males." While this educational system worked well for the vast majority Americans, it subconsciously diminished the role and value of a large segment of other Americans who did not share that same cultural heritage.

Today, through ceremonies in Federal, State, and local governments, as well as in the private sector, the month of February provides a common time during which we can all be reminded of the contributions and achievements of African-Americans.

I think many times our citizens are familiar with individual sporting achievements such as those of Willie Mays, Wilt Chamberlain, Michael Jordan, and Jackie Joyner-Kersee, but they tend to say "oh that's just the separate achievement of a few, and then only in the area of sports." In fact, the contributions of African-Americans to U.S. culture have been significant, and it is only through knowledge of the whole that the broader accomplishments and contributions can be seen.

To this end, I support recent changes in school curricula to include the significant contributions of African-Americans to the economic, political, and scientific advancement of the United States. It is through programs of this nature, introduced to students at an early age, that I believe we stand our best chance of making this great Nation of ours a racially unbiased society.

Mr. Speaker, Dr. Martin Luther King was one of the many who contributed immensely to our society by organizing sufficient force to implement the civil rights guarantees included in our Constitution 170 years before, but never implemented. His work has helped not only African-Americans but also women and others considered in a minority status.

Dr. King's "I Have a Dream" speech on the steps of the Lincoln memorial in 1963 spoke of the dreams of African-Americans more eloquently than any has since, and I want to quote portions of this speech:

WASHINGTON, DC, August 28, 1963.—Five score years ago, a great American, in whose symbolic shadow we stand, signed the Emancipation Proclamation. This momentous decree came as a great beacon light of hope to millions of Negro slaves who had been seared in the flames of withering injustice. It came as a joyous daybreak to end the long night of captivity.

But one hundred years later, we must face the tragic fact that the Negro is still not free. One hundred years later, the life of the Negro is still sadly crippled by the manacles of segregation and the chains of discrimination. One hundred years later, the Negro lives on a lonely island of poverty in the midst of a vast ocean of material prosperity. One hundred years later, the Negro is still languished in the corners of American society and finds himself an exile in his own land. So we have come here today to dramatize an appalling condition.

In a sense we have come to our nation's Capital to cash a check. When the architects of our republic wrote magnificent words of the Constitution and the Declaration of Independence, they were signing a promissory note to which every American was to fall heir. This note was a promise that all men would be guaranteed the unalienable rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

It is obvious today that America has defaulted on this promissory note insofar as her citizens of color are concerned. Instead of honoring this sacred obligation, America has given the Negro people a bad check; a check which has come back marked "insufficient funds." But we refuse to believe that the bank of justice is bankrupt. We refuse to believe that there are insufficient funds in the great vaults of opportunity of this nation. So we have come to cash this check—a check that will give us upon demand the riches of freedom and the security of justice. We have also come to this hallowed spot to remind America of the fierce urgency of now. This is no time to engage in the luxury of cooling off or to take the tranquilizing drug of gradualism. Now is the time to make real the promises of Democracy. Now is the time to rise from the dark and desolate valley of segregation to the sunlit path of racial justice. Now is the time to open the doors of opportunity to all of God's children. Now is the time to lift our nation from the quicksands of racial injustice to the solid rock of brotherhood.

It would be fatal for the nation to overlook the urgency of the moment and to underestimate the determination of the Negro. This sweltering summer of the Negro's legitimate discontent will not pass until there is an invigorating autumn of freedom and equality. 1963 is not an end, but a beginning. Those who hope that the Negro needed to blow off steam and will now be content will have a rude awakening if the nation returns to business as usual. There will be neither rest nor tranquility in America until the Negro is granted his citizenship rights. The whirlwinds of revolt will continue to shake the foundations of our nation until the bright day of justice emerges.

But there is something that I must say to my people who stand on the warm threshold which leads into the palace of justice. In the process of gaining our rightful place we must not be guilty of wrongful deeds. Let us not seek to satisfy our thirst for freedom by drinking from the cup of bitterness and hatred. We must forever conduct our struggle on the high plane of dignity and discipline. We must not allow our creative protest to degenerate into physical violence. Again and again we must rise to the majestic heights of meeting physical force with soul force. The marvelous new militancy which has engulfed the Negro community must not lead us to a distrust of all white people, for many of our white brothers, as evidenced by their presence here today, have come to realize that their destiny is tied up with our destiny and their freedom is inextricably bound to our freedom. We cannot walk alone.

And as we walk, we must make the pledge that we shall march ahead. We cannot turn back. There are those who are asking the devotees of civil rights, "When will you be satisfied?" We can never be satisfied as long as the Negro is the victim of the unspeakable horrors of police brutality. We can never be satisfied as long as our bodies, heavy with the fatigue of travel, cannot gain lodging in the motels of the highways and the hotels of the cities. We cannot be satisfied as long as the Negro's basic mobility is from a smaller ghetto to a larger one. We can never be satisfied as long as a Negro in Mississippi cannot vote and a Negro in New York believes he has nothing for which to vote. No, no, we are not satisfied, and we will not be satisfied until justice rolls down like waters and righteousness like a mighty stream.

I am not unmindful that some of you have come here out of great trials and tribulations. Some of you have come fresh from narrow jail cells. Some of you have come from areas where your quest for freedom left you battered by the storms of persecution and staggered by the winds of police brutality. You have been the veterans of creative suffering. Continue to work with the faith that unearned suffering is redemptive.

Go back to Mississippi, go back to Alabama, go back to South Carolina, go back to Georgia, go back to Louisiana, go back to the slums and ghettos of our northern cities, knowing that somehow this situation can and will be changed. Let us not wallow in the valley of despair.

I say to you today, my friends, that in spite of the difficulties and frustrations of the moment I still have a dream. It is a dream deeply rooted in the American dream.

I have a dream that one day this nation will rise up and live out the true meaning of its creed: "We hold these truths to be self-evident; that all men are created equal."

I have a dream that one day on the red hills of Georgia the sons of former slaves and the sons of former slaveowners will be able to sit down together at the table of brotherhood.

I have a dream that one day even the state of Mississippi, a desert state sweltering with the heat of injustice and oppression, will be transformed into an oasis of freedom and justice.

I have a dream that my four little children will one day live in a nation where they will not be judged by the color of their skin but by the content of their character.

I have a dream today.

I have a dream that one day every valley shall be exalted, every hill and mountain shall be made low, the rough places will be made plain, and the crooked places will be made straight, and the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together.

This is our hope. This is the faith with which I return to the South. With this faith we will be able to hew out of the mountain of despair a stone of hope. With this faith we will be able to transform the jangling discords of our nation into a beautiful symphony of brotherhood. With this faith we will be able to work together, to pray together, to struggle together, to go to jail together, to stand up for freedom together, knowing that we will be free one day.

And if America is to be a great nation this must become true. So let freedom ring from the prodigious hilltops of New Hampshire. Let freedom ring from the mighty mountains of New York. Let freedom ring from the heightening Alleghenies of Pennsylvania!

When we let freedom ring, when we let it ring from every village and every hamlet, from every state and every city, we will be able to speed up that day when all of God's children, black men and white men, Jews and Gentiles, Protestants and Catholics, will be able to join hands and sing in the words of the old Negro spiritual, "Free at last! free at last! thank God almighty, we are free at last!"

Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the leadership and the Congressional Black Caucus for organizing this special order today, and I want particularly to thank the chairman of the Caucus, Congressman KWEISE MFUME, and Congressman LOUIS STOKES for their leadership roles.

Ms. PELOSI. Madam Speaker, I thank my distinguished colleague from Ohio [Mr. STOKES] for calling this special order on Black History Month and choosing this year's appropriate theme, "Empowering Afro-American Organizations: Present and Future."

African-American organizations, such as the NAACP, National Urban League, and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference have worked together with the primary goals of achieving social and economic equality. During the 1960's these groups attempted to reach these goals by removing the legal structure that supported racial discrimination and segregation, and by developing the unanimously accepted view that overt acts of racism are not morally tolerable in American society. Even after these monumental achievements, African-Americans did not gain social and economic equality.

Today, the goals of achieving social and economic equality remain the same, only the scope has been expanded. African-American organizations now unite to address critical social conditions such as drug abuse, crime, poverty, health care, and education. In addition to working through legislation and litigation, they also focus on self-help approaches through education, drug rehabilitation, and job training programs.

I am fortunate to represent California's Eighth Congressional District, in which local African-American organizations actively work to improve conditions of African-Americans in the community. I would like to take this opportunity to commend a few of the many at work in our San Francisco community, including:

First, Father Jim Goode, pastor of St. Paul of the Shipwreck for founding the National Day of Prayer for the African-American family, the first Sunday of February;

Second, Lefty Gordon, executive director of the Ella Hill Hutch Community Center, for inaugurating the second year of midnight basketball, an education and recreation program working to bring young African-American men off the streets and into the classroom; and Third, Enola Maxwell, of the Potrero Hill neighborhood house, for continuing to house the nationally recognized Omega Boys Club as well as other community programs dedicated to the youth of Potrero Hill.

I thank these groups, Glide Memorial Church, the Washington Senators, and the many other civic organizations and leaders for their time and commitment to racial equality. With their help and continued service, the stature of African-Americans within our community will continue to be enriched.

In 1984, Benjamin Hooks, Jr., stated as he addressed a large group of African-American organizations one decade ago, that African-American organizations "must involve society as a whole in combating conditions adversely affecting all American families and impacting on black families in a very disproportionate manner." While local organizations work at the community level, and national organizations focus efforts to serve the African-American population through education, job training, and drug abuse programs, we the members of the 103d Congress and the administration must work to support their efforts.

We must remember that the fight for equal access to opportunities despite socioeconomic differences is a daily challenge. Society through the efforts of our community and national leaders can meet this important challenge—not only during Black History Month—but also during every month and every single day.

Ms. LAMBERT. Mr. Speaker, as we celebrate Black History Month and observe the many accomplishments and contributions of African-Americans to the rich history of our country, we need look no further than the Delta region of Arkansas' First Congressional District. African-American history and the Delta cannot be separated. African-Americans made an impression everywhere they settled in this country. Nowhere is this impression so firmly imprinted, so interwoven to the very fabric of the local economy, culture, and community as it is in the Delta.

Under the climate of many hardships of the past and present and as the Delta region began shifting from an agricultural to a manufacturing economy, African-Americans have made and continue to make numerous contributions in music, the arts, education, and the sciences. The Fargo Agricultural School was founded to give blacks an opportunity to get an education and have career guidance. The rich musical history of blues grew and developed in many a Delta town. African-Americans became landowners and businessmen. African-American architects and craftsmen designed and built the Centennial Baptist Church in Helena, AR, now on the National Register of Historic Places. This persistence of the spirit is evident today in the number of African-Americans from the region who have assumed positions of prominence in every field of endeavor. There is no longer one black doctor, one black lawyer, one black educator, or one black elected official. Their numbers swell with the pride of their accomplishments. Just as significant, however, are the lessons these African-Americans impart to us about the importance of such things as education, integrity, and belief in oneself.

In my personal reflections on Black History Month, visions of my fifth grade teacher Muriel Wilkins dance before me. They say in the life of a child, teachers are second only to parents in a child's upbringing. Mrs. Wilkins shaped my life by teaching me not only reading, writing, and arithmetic, but compassion for my fellow man and responsibility for my actions. I will be forever grateful for her powerful influence on my life.

Fortunately, America is blessed with an abundance of human talent. If we are to continue our unique role in world affairs, we must rededicate ourselves to providing the opportunities for all Americans to reach their full potential. Paying tribute to African-American history during the month of February is indeed a moving testimony to the greatness of our Nation—and to the individuals who help to make it so.

Mr. VISCLOSKY. Mr. Speaker, as we all know, February is Black History Month. All across the United States, people are honoring the great many contributions of African-Americans to the history of our Nation. Throughout our Nation's history there have been many individual black Americans who have made important contributions, which have made our country great.

I would like to remark on the 1994 theme for Black History Month, "Empowering Afro-American Organizations: Present and Future," with a specific focus on the vital role of African-American churches. The church has always been more than just a place of worship. From its beginnings in the late 18th century the African-American church has been a very important institution. The church is a rock solid foundation of community values and leadership.

At various times, it has been a place where children have been educated, a place where political activity has started, and a place where a righting of social wrongs was initiated.

One of the church's first leaders was Richard Allen. He was born a slave and bought his own freedom. In 1786, he worked as a lay minister among black members of Philadelphia's St. George Methodist Episcopal Church. Because of his work, and the work of Absalom Jones, the African-American membership of the church grew 10 times larger. Tragically, this led to the segregation of the African-American worshipers.

Ultimately, Allen and Jones were physically removed from the church while praying and the other African-American members left en masse. Thereafter, Allen and Jones organized the Free African Society. In 1791, it became the African Church, and in 1816 Allen founded the African Methodist Episcopal [AME] Church.

The AME Church is one of the largest and oldest African-American churches in existence. It has grown into an international denomination with a membership of more than 1 million. It operates 11 colleges and schools of religion and its business and social service entities include housing developments, homes, and programs for senior citizens, a hospital and a camping facility. It is these and other activities that have made the church an important part of our country's social fabric.

Additionally, we must remember the large role the church played in shaping the life and accomplishments of Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr. We cannot forget that he became leader of the civil rights movement as a leader of his church. Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., and his work are the best examples of why we should recognize and honor Black History Month and the contributions of Afro-American organizations to our Nation's past, present, and future.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise to participate in today's special order in recognition of Black History Month.

First celebrated as Negro History Week in 1926, Black History Month is the brainchild of the father of black history, historian Dr. Carter G. Woodson. Dr. Woodson understood clearly the importance of preserving a thorough and accurate record of our past for future generations. A people whose history and accomplishments go unrecorded, Dr. Woodson warned, "becomes a negligible factor in the thought of the world and stands the danger of being exterminated." Thus, Dr. Woodson set out to document the experience of black men and women in Africa and the New World and to record the tremendous contributions of African-Americans to the Nation in which they toiled for three centuries in forced servitude. Our history in this Nation is unique.

During Black History Month, it is customary to celebrate the contributions and achievements of African-Americans throughout our Nation's history.

This year, we reserve our highest esteem for those outstanding organizations that continue to serve as the driving economic and social forces behind the strength of the African-American community. The way in which these organizations have conducted business while masterfully serving the community is praiseworthy, and deserving of national recognition. I believe it is critically important to take note of the ongoing contributions of our African-American organizations. I would like to call attention to two organizations from my congressional district in Los Angeles whose service, achievements, and deeds merit recognition and praise.

The Los Angeles Sentinel, originally founded under the name "Eastside Shopper" in 1933, remains one of the most respected newspapers in California. Leon H. Washington, Jr., was 23 years old when he came to Los Angeles in 1930 to begin his career as an advertising salesman for the California Eagle—at the time the largest and oldest black-owned newspaper in the West. A natural leader and independent thinker, he decided in 1933, to quit working for the California Eagle and started his own newspaper. Mr. Washington founded the Eastside Shopper in his home. As the publication began to grow, the Colonel—as he was called by most who knew him—established an office on Vernon Avenue, and subsequently renamed the paper the Sentinel.

In 1933, discrimination ran rampant against people of color in the jobs market, in both the public and private sectors. Leon Washington was concerned about the employment plight of African-American Angelenos at that time, and and it was his fight against discrimination in employment which brought him to prominence as a publisher in Los Angeles and inspired others to suggest that he convert from a free-circulation shopper to a paid-circulation standardized newspaper. Through his paper, the Colonel launched a fight against discriminatory merchants who made most of their money by selling goods to African-American customers, but refused to hire them as workers.

The Sentinel has been honored for its coverage of the Watts disturbance, its publication of special editions, the work of individual writers and departmental editors, and for its fighting editorials.

After the death of the beloved Colonel in 1974, his widow, Mrs. Ruth Washington, garnered the reins of control at the paper and assumed the position of business manager at the Los Angeles Sentinel. When Mrs. Washington assumed the position at the death of her husband, she had to take a crash course in newspaper operations. She was not, however, inexperienced in business. In fact, from an early age she had been fascinated with business. In preparation for her new role, she majored in business at the Emily Griffith Opportunity School in Denver. After she moved to Los Angeles, she continued her studies at the Metropolitan Trade School. Mrs. Washington created a climate at the newspaper; one of fairness, consideration, compassion, and understanding—all of which led the Sentinel to its unparalleled success.

Today, the Sentinel continues to excel under the outstanding leadership of its publisher, Attorney Kenneth R. Thomas. The Los Angeles Sentinel is an exemplary example of an empowering African-American organization providing for the very community which has benefited from its existence for over 60 years.

Mr. Speaker, the second organization that I am proud to acknowledge is Crossroads National Education and Arts Center [Crossroads NEAC], an unique organization that affects the healing, growth, and quality of life enhancement in the inner city of Los Angeles. Established in 1981, Crossroads is dedicated to preserving and expanding the African-American culture through the arts to create avenues for education, economic development, and self-sufficiency while providing a legacy for current and successive generations. Crossroads NEAC was cofounded by Angela Mills, producer-director-writer, and Marla Gibbs, noted actress, entrepreneur, and community activist, in response to an overwhelming need to provide viable arts and educational programs in the inner city. Located in the Crenshaw-Leimert Park community—Crossroads NEAC is at the heart of its constituency.

With support from a number of individuals, corporations, and other funding organizations, Crossroads NEAC has provided scholarships for students from low-income households. It has helped to launch the careers of several of its students in theatre, television, and movies. Based upon its established reputation, the center has attracted the attention of industry agents and producers as a source of talent.

As Crossroads NEAC continues to grow, its potential to utilize the arts as an instrument of peace, healing, and understanding—as well as a vehicle for jobs and economic growth—also grows.

Crossroads NEAC's commitment to excellence has earned numerous awards, including the New York Audelco Theatre Award, 12 NAACP Image Awards, and several community achievement awards. In addition, the popular television program "227" was developed and launched at Crossroads NEAC, while other plays have gone on to Broadway, such as "Checkmates" and "The Meeting."

The Crossroads National Education and Arts Center—housed within the Vision Complex—has served as a catalyst for true economic revitalization in the inner community of Los Angeles, with an impact on the greater Los Angeles community and beyond. As the largest multidisciplinary arts organization in the inner community of Los Angeles, Crossroads NEAC is uniquely and strategically positioned to embrace and be embraced by numerous underserved populations in our city. It gives me great pleasure to nationally recognize this most outstanding organization.

Please join me, Mr. Speaker, in applauding these contemporary African-American organizations for their significant accomplishments and contributions to the African-American community. By highlighting the wide range of achievements of these organizations, we are assured of a greater understanding and appreciation of the vast contributions African-Americans have made to our society.

Ms. WATERS. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join my colleagues this evening in marking February as "Black History Month."

There's an old saying that "If you don't know where you came from, you don't know where you are going." As African-Americans, we know where we've come from. That's something we just can't forget. We are reminded of it each and every day.

When our Constitution guaranteed this country's citizens "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness" African-Americans—and women—were pointedly excluded from freedom's blessings. For purposes of representation in this Congress, slaves were counted as three-fifths of a person.

A bloody Civil War set us free, but mere force of arms couldn't make us equal. One hundred twenty-eight years after the end of the Civil War, the struggle for political and economic equality continues.

This struggle has yielded a rich pantheon of heroes—businesspeople and politicians, preachers and inventors, writers and musicians, and sports figures. Some of these brothers' and sisters' names are household words—George Washington Carver or Martin Luther King or Billie Holliday. Others are less known, if no less valued—homerun king Josh Gibson, educator Mary Macleod Bethune, and Harlem's Mother Hale. And, of course, some of our biggest heroes are ordinary people who confronted injustice, overcame obstacles, and moved our struggle forward. I'm talking about Rosa Parks refusing to move to the back of the bus, Medgar Evers facing down the Klan in Mississippi, and Sojourner Truth "following the drinking gourd" North to freedom.

In these often difficult times, it is good to think of heroes as we chart our future course. Our community suffers the pain of violence and crime. We watch many of our children drop out of school and out of the mainstream. Economic opportunities dwindle, the result of 12 years of neglect by the Federal Government and the export of jobs to low-wage countries. Teen pregnancy is a major obstacle to our young women realizing their full, God-given potential.

Now, more than ever before, we need to remember that we are inheritors of a legacy of struggle. Nothing worth having comes easy. We struggle with the pain and frustration and hopelessness in our communities. Too many of our sons and daughters are unskilled, undereducated, and scarred by substance abuse and violence. We are frustrated by the lack of resources we have with which to tackle these problems. We are even more frustrated by the lack of sufficient political will.

We need to strengthen our families because families have seen us through the hardest of times. We need to bring capital for our businesspeople and homeowners, quality education for our kids, and job opportunities for our working people.

The genius and energies of our African-American heroes have carried us to where we are today. We stand on the shoulders of giants. We have to understand the power we have if we take heart and inspiration from the examples set by the Shirley Chisholms and the Jackie Robinsons, the Malcolm X's and the Fanny Lou Hamers.

We can never give up. We can never give in. By lifting ourselves up we can make our lives better and build an America that, at long last, lives up to its noble words and ideals.

Mr. ROEMER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today, during Black History Month, to honor an African-American whose contribution to education lives far beyond her lifetime. Her outstanding achievements have influenced the culture, richness, and diversity of every American school today.

Mary McLeod Bethune was an educator, lecturer, and executive who dedicated her adult life to the education of African-Americans. She overcame obstacles thought insurmountable in her quest to achieve her goals. Her perseverance and dedication to educating African-Americans of all ages gave her the courage to challenge those obstacles, and her own education ad intelligence gave her the tools to defeat them.

Mary struggled to gain her own education. Born in 1875 to a newly freed slave family, her early years were spent working on the small family farm. When she was 9, the first free school opened 5 miles from her home. And she walked those 10 miles every day to and from school then returned home to teach what she had learned to her family.

By the age of 15, she had learned the entire curriculum of the small school but had no opportunity to move on to a higher education. Her family had already mortgaged their farm, and after buying the family's food, clothing, and shelter, there was no money left. Mary did finally acquire the resources necessary to fund her continued education. A donation was made to the school that she was attending in order to fund one student's higher education, and the teachers in the school chose Mary for that honor. She traveled to the Scotia Seminary located in Concord, NC, and there her plan to educate herself transformed into a desire to help others build a stronger future for themselves and their families through literacy and knowledge.

She opened a school, very much like the one she attended 5 miles from her home, in Daytona Beach, FL. With no money for books, pencils, or even lamps, she begged and scavenged what she and her students needed to survive and learn. When the school opened, there were only eight students. But in just 2 years that number grew to more than 250. In 1923, the original school merged with a men's college to become the Bethune-Cookman College with more than 600 students, 14 modern buildings on a campus encompassing 32 acres.

From teaching, Mary was launched into administration on a national level. She served in such posts as director of the Division of Negro Affairs of the National Youth Administration, vice president of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation of the National Urban League and president of the National Council of Negro Women, an organization she founded in 1937. She was also honored by being awarded the Spingarn Medal and the Francis A. Drexel Award for distinguished service to her race.

Today, the legacy of Mary McLeod Bethune lives in the diversity of our schools and the expanded opportunities that African-Americans now have in our educational system. Her strength as a teacher, and as a person, gives us hope that we can continue to improve the educational system and the environment in which our children, of all races, learn and grow so that we may give them the opportunity to seek out the excellence in themselves that Mary McLeod Bethune found in her own life.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. STOKES. Madam Speaker, I ask that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the subject of my special order tonight

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

NATIONAL SECURITY, IMMIGRATION AND HEALTH CARE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. CLAYTON). Pursuant to the Speaker's announced policy of February 11, 1994, the gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER] is recognized for 30 minutes as the minority leader's designee.

Mr. HUNTER. I thank the Speaker. Under an agreement, although we are constrained for time under this new arrangement, there is always still time for comity and some friendship in the House. I would like to yield to the gentleman from Oregon so that they may complete their time requests and hope that they would reciprocate when we have need in the future. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

BLACK HISTORY MONTH

Mr. KOPETSKI. I thank the gentleman for his friendship and allowing me these brief moments to add to this evening's special order organized by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STOKES] on Black History Month.

Madam Speaker, this is my last contribution to this important effort that we do in the House every year. This is my last year in the Congress. In previous years I have spoken about the importance of black Americans in Oregon history, my home State, and do so tonight as well.

At this point I place in the RECORD two articles on the role black Americans have played in Oregon's history. One is from the Statesman Journal of January 23, 1994, by Rick Harmon, editor of the Oregon Historical Quarterly. Mr. Harmon contributed this work from the Statesman Journal. I commend him for his effort, and I recognize the Statesman Journal for participating in this commemoration and highlighting of Black Americans Month.

The second article, contributed to the Oregon Statesman Journal by Hank Arends. This article references a new book entitled "Northwest Black Pioneers: A Centennial Tribute," coauthored by Mr. Joe Franklin.

But tonight, Madam Speaker, I want to remind my colleagues that history is important and critical and it is important to recognize African-Americans as part of our chronicle of American history. Also, it is important to recognize African-Americans today who today are making history.

The person I want to highlight is a good friend of mine, a comrade-in-arms, Mr. Ron Hearndon.

Let me take a few moments to highlight Ron's career thus far. He comes to Oregon from Kansas, he is a graduate of Reed College in Oregon, he did graduate study at the University of Liberia. He also attended the UCLA Graduate School of Business. His professional experience: He has gone from teacher to director of the black educational center to executive director of the National Association of Schools of Excellence, Director of the National Head Start Program. He was elected in 1988 to the National Head Start Directors Association and in 1991 elected vice president of the National Head Start Association.

I am proud to say that in 1993 he was elected president of the National Head Start Association, representing 700,000 Head Start children and families and over 100,000 Head Start staff members. He received numerous awards and honors for his efforts today. I will not go into those.

Finally, I do want to say that Ron is making history today for what he is doing for the children of Oregon, African-American and non-African-American as well, and for the children of America, again African-American and non-African-American as well. Ron Hearndon has made the lives of countless children in Oregon and in America better. He has dedicated his life, his experience, his education, to make life better for children throughout this land. It is an honor to have him as a friend, a tribute to his heritage that he has dedicated his life to where we all should put an emphasis, as he is, and that is for our children.

Madam Speaker, I thank you and I thank the gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER].

DON'T FORGET THE EFFORTS OF BLACK PIONEERS IN OREGON

(By Rick Harmon)

Who were Oregon's African-American "pioneers," and what can we say about their contribution to the state's history?

The "pioneer period," so far as the state of Oregon is concerned, traditionally has been situated in the two decades between 1840 and 1860.

During that time, because of the large-scale migration of white Americans to the Willamette Valley, the foundation was laid for the conquest and subjugation of the American Indians who had occupied the Oregon Country for centuries.

That conquest, euphemistically called "settlement" by earlier historians and by various cultural mythmakers even in our own time, was largely a white enterprise.

But African-Americans, and other nonwhite people, did play a role.

From the seventeenth to the nineteenth centuries, black Africans and their genes were carried en masse to the Americas via the slave trade. Before that, Africans of various shades had appeared sporadically for centuries throughout the Western world.

During these years, and especially during the period of the slave-trade diaspora, African genes mixed widely with the genes of Caucasians as well as with those of other nonwhite peoples.

When Europeans and Amercians began aggressively to explore the Pacific Northwest coast and interior in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries, individuals with genes of recent African origin unquestionably took part.

A few, such as the slave York, who journeyed with Meriwether Lewis and William Clark on their overland expedition in 1805–06, were indisputably African American.

Others, such as Marcus Lopez, cabin boy of the Lady Washington when it anchored on the Oregon coast in 1788, and Moses "Black" Harris, an Oregon Country trapper and guide in the 1830s and 1840s, were more racially ambiguous.

One thing is certain, though: York, Lopez, Harris and most likely dozens of others who helped conquer the Oregon Country, would have felt the sting of the post-Civil War "Jim Crow" laws of the South.

In that sense, at least, we can consider them African-Americans and acknowledge their contribution.

What distinguished nineteenth-century African-American pioneers in Oregon Country from their white counterparts? As far as the indigenous population was concerned, little distinguished them.

They were interlopers, one and all. However, for most of the nineteenth-century white immigrant population, the difference between white and black was the difference between Oregon as an imagined Eden and Oregon as just another vexatious extension of the great dispute about slavery that racked the states.

Thus, though early Oregonians were divided in their loyalties and sympathies between North and South, they were nearly unanimous in their racist hostility to African-Americans.

Between 1840 and 1870, the classical pioneer and state-founding years of Oregon history, the citizens of Oregon enacted a variety of racist laws designed, in the first instance, to discourage African-Americans from coming to Oregon, and, in the second instance, to punish them or limit their civil rights if they did come.

The year 1993 marked the sesquicentennial of the so-called Great Migration of 1843. Public officials, journalists, entrepreneurs and various hucksters spent more than a year encouraging Oregonians and tourists to celebrate the achievement of the largely white overland pioneers (and to buy a variety of products fraudulently linked to a historical episode).

Indeed, the 53,000 or so people who came to Oregon along the Oregon Trail by 1860 were a tough and determined bunch.

But if our purpose is to recognize extraordinary courage and fortitude (not properly the business of historians, in any case), let's not forget the couple hundred African American pioneers who had settled in Oregon by 1880.

These pioneers not only withstood the rigors of the journey and the resistance of the native inhabitants, but they survived as well the enmity and ingratitude of their fellow conquerors.

BLACK PIONEERS: OREGON ROOTS

(By Hank Arends)

The colorful settling of the West depicted in film includes many figures of Caucasian cowboys and wagon train pioneers, regal Americans Indians and a few Hispanics.

The role of the black Americans often is neglected. But their struggle for a better life echoes through to the peace and justice efforts of the 1990s.

With black slavery a way of life for part of the United States in the 1800s, hundreds of blacks chased a dream of freedom toward the "Golden West."

They often found that enduring the hardships of travel across the country only subjected them to further affliction at the end of the trail. Yet they persevered to carve lives of hope and substance for their families.

The first blacks to visit Oregon accompanied the explorers of the late 18th and early 19th centuries. Marcus Lopez was the first black to arrive, coming aboard the ship Lady Washington with Capt. Robert Gray.

Lopez was killed in a property dispute with Americans Indians, making him the first black to die in the territory. A man named York was thought to be the second black in the area, spending the winter of 1804 near what is now Astoria with the Lewis and Clark expedition.

The era of the explorers, the mountain men and trappers, and early missionaries lasted for the first four decades of the 1800s.

The wagon trains of the 1840s led to a population explosion in the Oregon Territory. There also were many blacks who hitched their hopes for a brighter future with the west-heading wagons.

The Oregon census of 1850 listed 207 people who were identified as being black or mulatto. About two-thirds of these are thought to have been Hawaiians or mixed-breed Native Americans because the Caucasian census takers lumped the races into a single category.

The count came at the end of the decade, when those seeking the dream of freedom saw it eroded by the restrictive antiblack residence and property laws approved by the early government. The Bureau of Census reported 1,107 blacks in Oregon by the 1900 count.

The laws of the early Oregon territory forbid the permanent residence of blacks. The only known legal application of the restriction came in 1851 against Jacob Vanderpool. He operated a saloon and boarding house across the street from the Oregon Statesman newspaper, then in Oregon City.

Despite his lawyer arguing that the law was unconstitutional, the judge found him guilty of the misdemeanor and ordered him out of the territory within 30 days. An exclusionary clause would remain an unenforced part of the Oregon Constitution until 1926.

The question of owning slaves was the other major piece of legislation affecting blacks that was debated in Oregon for years. The constitutional convention of 1857 was looking toward statehood and left the matter to a vote of the people. Slavery was rejected by a vote of 7,727 to 2,645.

Even with the overwhelming margin of the vote, life wasn't all sweetness for blacks in the state. A.E. Flowers described Portland in the 1860s:

"When I arrived in Portland there was only one Negro church in the whole town, the 'People's Church,' which was an independent organization. It was organized in 1862.

"At this time, colored people were not allowed to own any property. They were not allowed to go into any kind of business and they were not allowed to vote. Every Negro had to pay a $10 head tax. The colored people had no civil rights. It was very difficult to get jobs except as a menial."

Despite legislation, the 1860 census showed a few of the 128 blacks in the state as slaves. Others were servants to white families and most were living independently. They earned their living as farmers, cooks, blacksmiths and in other service occupations.

They were the people who helped lay the foundations for the Oregon of today.

Joe Franklin, a Portland educator and historian, has written many articles on the black experience in the Northwest. He is coauthor of the book Northwest Black Pioneers, a Centennial Tribute. He was tapped as the chairman of the Northwest African American Writers' Workshop.

Franklin said the study of the black pioneers was relevant for all races in 1994.

"Some of the lessons that we should learn is that we all share our human experience and its ups and downs and peculiarities," he said.

"Through all of the trials and tribulations that the human spirit endures—be it black, white, red, or yellow—prevails the humanity of all these people.

"As we get to know each other better and understand the life that we all live—the common life—we grow to have more appreciation for each other. That engenders more cooperation and more respect, which produces a better citizen for America.

"That gives us all a higher standard of life, because we are looking for the best in people. It is always easy to find the worse, if we look in the news. We are looking for the best and for an avenue for people to grow."

Mr. HUNTER. I am happy to give time to our friend, and I want to thank him for his great service to the House.

Mr. MFUME. I thank the gentleman from California very much. I will attempt to be brief.

The gentleman has been kind enough to wait in order, and I do not want to delay the business before this House which the gentleman seeks to address.

However, Madam Speaker, as the chairman of the Congressional Black Caucus, I do want to express my thanks to Members of this body, black, white, Jew, gentile, Hispanic, Asian, and of course the women of this Congress, who have come forth either this evening or who have submitted for the official RECORD their own remarks highlighting and underscoring not just the need but the purpose of Black History Month; why, as Dr. Carter G. Woodson thought many years ago that it was important for us to take pause as a nation to reflect on the contributions of our citizens and, even more importantly in this month, on those of African ancestry.

My thanks on behalf of the caucus to all of those who have come and who will come in future days to do the same. I would also ask that I be allowed to submit formal remarks for the RECORD.

Mr. HUNTER. Madam Speaker, I yield to the gentlewoman from Georgia [Ms. MCKINNEY].

Ms. MCKINNEY. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

On this occasion, as it is my father's birthday, I would like to lift his name up and to say to him that I appreciate all of the things he has done to help me.

During this time of Black History Month, I would like to say that my father taught me my pride, taught me history and to know myself and instilled in me a readiness and a commitment to my community, a readiness to serve my community. He has given me the single-minded purposefulness to serve the people of Georgia and my State.

I thank the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER] may resume his time. I may say it was very kind of the gentleman to extend his time.

Mr. HUNTER. Madam Speaker, listen, it is my pleasure, and I am sure that that is the position everyone will take on this side, and we may have to remind our friends when we run short that they would yield.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. And this Member will help the gentleman from California to remind them.

Mr. HUNTER. I thank the Speaker.

Madam Speaker, I want to address three areas tonight that are very important not only to the Republican Members of the House of Representatives but, we know, to the other side of the aisle, to the Democrat Representatives and also the American people.

I want to talk a little bit about national security, the first and most primary responsibility of the Federal Government to its people. I want to talk a little bit about immigration, about that subject that is on everyone's mind and is very much a concern of the taxpayers, and I want to talk a little bit about health care.

Let me start off, Madam Speaker, addressing the national defense question because the explosions in the Balkans that are now so well illustrated on national television every night, the ongoing problems in the Middle East, the continuing development of nuclear weapons on the Korean Peninsula by the Northern Koreans, and other trouble spots around the world, continue to remind the American people that it is not a safe world yet and that this most important obligation to the American people that this House maintains is to defend our people and to protect them, and that there is some question as to whether or not we are cutting our defenses too fast and too deeply.

Now, Madam Speaker, we have now a very cerebral Secretary of Defense, Mr. Perry. He is a man who is a studious man, an analyst. He knows weapons systems forward and backward, and his job is to try to take dwindling dollars, massive defense cuts, if my colleagues will, and render our military smaller, but no less ready than the military that maintained America's power projection and defenses through the 1980's, and no less effective than that military. I think we have some problems, Madam Speaker.

President Bill Clinton took the Bush defense budget, which President Bush cut after consulting with Secretary Cheney and the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs, Colin Powell, by $50 billion over his 5-year plan. So, in 1992, Madam Speaker, George Bush had a defense budget from which he had slashed $50 billion. Let us use that as a baseline.

President Clinton, after achieving office, decided to cut defense an additional $127 billion. I think that cut is too deep, too serious and leaves our forces too vulnerable, and in later years, 1996, 1997, 1998, it will lead to the same problems that we saw in the Carter years.

When I came into office in 1980, when, as a new Congressman from San Diego I was confronted with a military that involved about 1,000 petty officers in the Navy, those were the people that really knew how to make the ships run—leaving the Navy—1,000 people every month leaving the Navy, young men and women in the Armed Forces on food stamps being told by memos that were circulated by the command, "Don't be ashamed to take food stamps even though you're wearing the uniform,"—by an air fleet, aircraft, jet aircraft, attack aircraft, that were less than 50 percent fully mission capable because so many of them had been cannibalized for the spare parts to make the remaining aircraft run. We had, after extensive analysis, a hollow Army, an Army in which we had fewer people than we had ever had in our history who had high school degrees, and these people were expected to operate high-technology equipment.

We had to rebuild national security and national defense in the 1980's and I think everyone in the United States would agree that that investment in strength was worthwhile.

Madam Speaker, it was worthwhile because by showing strength to the Soviet Union when they emplaced SS–20 missiles in Europe to move our cruise missile program into Europe by moving Pershing II's into Europe, and, when we started to do that, lo and behold the Russians told us they wanted to come to the bargaining table. They did come to the bargaining table, and the consummation of that bargaining process was unprecedented arms agreements, and ultimately the breakdown of the Soviet Union itself and the bringing down of the Berlin Wall.

So, Madam Speaker, strength worked.

In the 1980's strength worked, and I would be happy to yield to my friend, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. KINGSTON].

Mr. KINGSTON. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER] for yielding to me.

Madam Speaker, one of the points I wanted to make along that line is to have an effective military one of the things that, of course, we did with Desert Storm is, when we were dropping bombs down chimney chutes, it was doing more than blowing up a building. It made a statement worldwide that the American military has the best technology, the best force night or day. We are ready to fight. We can do it accurately. We can do it effectively. And that kind of statement is such a security guarantee for people all over the world because it said, "You know, I don't want to take on America," and we have been a peace-loving nation in that I have heard many times, as the gentleman has, that, if there is going to be a policeman of the world, let us hope there does not have to be one, but, if there is, let us let it be America.

Mr. HUNTER. Madam Speaker, the gentleman makes an excellent point.

As my colleagues know, I think, if someone was to analyze, or guess, why the Serbs are pulling back artillery right now that is ringing these civilian population centers, why they are pulling it back rather than take on the United States, the answer may be that they saw some of the film clips from CNN from Desert Storm when literally we were able to hit pinpoint targets with smart weapons. What that teaches us is we need not just a large military with enough men and women to operate equipment and operate it well, but we also have to put a lot of money into research and development, into some high tech systems, so we do not have to throw 50 bombs at a target, and maybe have some collateral damage, some civilian damage. We also need to have the ability to pinpoint a weapons system so we can go in and take out a military target without hurting civilians, and I think that if I were the Serbs watching some of those CNN news reels where we absolutely hit precisely what we were aiming at, that I, as a Serb military leader, would certainly have taken that into account in deciding whether to take on the United States or not.

Now, the gentleman mentioned earlier about the personnel and about the differences in today's military personnel versus the early 1980's, and one of the things I was able to do last week was greet an airplane full of troops coming back from Somalia, and I was the second hand they shook when they got on American soil for the first time since they were back, and I was impressed, and I also spent a lot of time at Fort Stewart with the 24th Infantry Division, at Hunter, and also Kings Bay, and I know the gentleman visits it quite frequently, and I have always been impressed of the dedication of the young men and women serving our military today, that they are professionals, have a deep amount of pride and patriotism in what they are doing. They know what their mission is. Their mission is clear to them. They follow their duty.

And I am just so proud, as the gentleman knows, to shake hands with these folks when they were coming off the plane. It was a real thrill to me, but it also made me sleep a little bit better at night knowing that that is the type of person that we have in today's Armed Forces.

Mr. HUNTER. As the gentleman knows, Madam Speaker, I thank him for bringing that up because of the defense budget.

The Clinton defense budget, the fiscal year 1995 DOD budget, really contains a military pay cut, and we have to remember what we did for our young people in the 1980's. In 1981 we brought in a military pay raise in October of 12.2 percent, and that brought a lot of military families out of the position where they were having to take food stamps to a position where they can wear the uniform with pride—teaching our military to have pride, to once again acquire pride in itself. That was an important lesson in the 1980's. Part of that was because of pay increases and the fact that we did not have long lapses between pay increases like we had had in the 1970's.

The Clinton defense budget is going to give a real cut in terms of real buying power to our military families, and let me just tell my colleagues that here is a problem that President Clinton's defense budget has whether he has Secretary Perry or Secretary Aspin, who has left, or anybody else coming in to try to make this shoe fit. He has two problems.

The first problem is:

Now we know that because Secretary Aspin, who was the chairman of the Committee on Armed Services before he left, did an analysis of what it would take to fight two wars, and he came to the conclusion that the only way to fight two wars simultaneously; that is a Desert Storm type operation and have enough reserves on hand to handle the Panama Canal type of a contingency, was to go with the option in which approximately $50 billion was cut from the Bush defense baseline.

So we went with the $50 billion cut, called that option C, and said we can live with that. President Clinton has now cut $127 billion below that, and there is a very important point here for Americans to remember. The reason we were able to win Desert Storm decisively without a lot of casualties was because we offered overwhelming force.

One thing that our military leaders have taught us is if you go in and engage an enemy, where you have just as many, just barely have the number of troops that he has and barely have the number of weapons and technology, and you just hold him off and you grind each other down, as you grind each other down, you take enormous casualties. And that means black body bags come back to the United States filled with Americans.

Now, the way to win a war in an effective fashion and to save your young people in uniform is to do what Colin Powell said, strike the enemy with overwhelming force. The option C that was provided by Secretary Aspin gave us at least the ability to win two wars, to handle two wars at the same time and present some force on the battlefield with those two wars and maybe handle the Panama canal contingency at the same time.

Now, the option that we now are being presented by President Clinton says this, and you have to listen carefully to what he says. He says we can win two wars nearly simultaneously. What does that mean?

That means that if we have a Desert Storm type operation, where we have to go in and stop Saddam Hussein or someone like that from going into Saudi oil fields, and we take them on and we are engaged there and, at the same time, the North Koreans look at this as their opportunity, their opening, and they break out on the Korean peninsula, then President Clinton says, "I can almost handle them both at the same time."

What does "Almost simultaneously" mean? What it means is, you can handle one war by just holding off the enemy but taking a lot of casualties, because you are not winning the war. You are just grinding them down, holding them off. You go in and try to win the other battlefield and when you have won on the second battlefield, you come back to where you were holding them, where you have taken enormous casualties, and then you try to win there. And that is going to be costly to Americans.

Mr. KINGSTON. In the real world situation, we all agree that we need to kill a fly with a sledge hammer, because that is the way to save the most lives and not have the highest casualties. You are saying we have a potential problem in Korea with the North Korean build up. Then we have Bosnia. We do not know what the Serbs are going to do. Last week they backed off. Let us hope that they are willing to sit down and negotiate. But you have those two hot spots right now. Then you have the Middle East. So what would happen if all three of these areas erupted?

Mr. HUNTER. What we have right now, with the military being cut drastically as it is right now, we are cashiering 2,000 young people a week out of the military right now. We could not fight and win a Desert Storm operation right now in the same fashion that we won Desert Storm.

He pointed out today, and I think this is an important point for the gentleman from Georgia, that we are going to be procuring only about 250 aircraft in 1995. Excuse me. We are going to be procuring 127 aircraft in 1995. According to the gentleman from California, who spoke today on this point, Mr. CUNNINGHAM, just to maintain your force level, because your aircraft are aging, as you go out on flight operations with them and you have to replace them, we have to procure about 350 aircraft a year, military aircraft, just to keep the force level modernized, just so you do not have a bunch of old planes out there that will get the young people killed.

So we are only procuring 127 planes. And that means we are building in obsolescence right now to our fighter air fleet. And at some point in 1996, 1997, 1998, we are going to be in the same position that we were in the 1970's when Jimmy Carter had the hollow military.

At the same time, I might add, in fiscal year 1995, we are only going to build six ships. We are only going to build 18 strategic missiles, and we are building no tanks whatsoever. So there are absolutely no replacements now being built for tanks. That means at some point down the line those tanks are going to be old. They are going to be obsolete, and they will not present that top-of-the-line battlefield force that we had in Desert Storm.

Mr. KINGSTON. I would like to ask you some more details about that procurement, because one of the things I am concerned about, and maybe the gentleman from San Diego can talk about this a little bit, but the situation with the maintenance worries me. Because now the gentleman has been a pilot, and I guess you know what it is like to be up there and maybe hear a strange sound coming out of the engine. That has to be worse than spotting an enemy airplane. What about the maintenance situation?

Mr. HUNTER. Let me frame that question for our friend from San Diego, the top gun, Mr. CUNNINGHAM.

I have a paper in front of me that says the navy today has a budget shortfall of $765 million, and because of that they have a backlog of unrepaired aircraft numbering 150. They have a backlog of 250 aircraft engines that need maintenance right now. Is that accurate?

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Yes; it is. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

One of the problems that we have is the O&M accounts, which is operations and maintenance.

I think the President and this administration and the House is trying to beef up that O&M account, knowing that there is that shortfall. But in many cases, our pilots are operating with their planes that are 15 through 20 years of age. It is like your car, the older that car gets, the more difficult it is to maintain.

For example, the Navy and Marine Corps are only procuring 24 airplanes this year. It takes 360 to maintain current force level. You don't have to be a mathematical genius to figure out that you are going to turn into a pumpkin. and when you do that, how do you expand that force out, as you try and rework it, put the rewiring in, you upgrade it. But essentially, you take a 1950 Chevy, which in some cases are pretty good, by the way, the Chevies are, and expand them for some 20 to 30 years. But if you are driving that airplane every day, which we are in Somalia, we are wearing it out. We did in Desert Storm. We took a tremendous toll on the aircraft life and the service life not only aircraft but tanks and ships and everything else. And then in Somalia and then, if we get into Bosnia, which I do not support, we will tire those machines out.

In the future, there is no procurement scheduled to buy new airplanes.

Mr. KINGSTON. You have been in the cockpit. My question to you is, we have got the mechanical problem. We have the financial problem. But what about the morale problem? What does it do to a pilot, when he or she is put there in this machine worrying about the maintenance log being backlogged? What will that do to our esprit de corps?

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. A pilot is not going to take, generally, I would say $99\frac{9}{10}$ of the time, a pilot, Air Force, Navy, Marine Corps, Army, is not going to take an airplane they feel is unsafe. The airplane is going to have to be up. It may not have some of the systems working. You may fly that airplane without enough radar, which determines the amount and type of training that you can receive. But if there is a doubt in their mind that that airplane is not up to speed mechanically, they are not going to take it.

I have seen that as an exception, but we try and do away with that.

The second phase is that the more you fly an airplane, the safer that airplane actually is because you are exercising it. With the training cutback and the funding cutback, that becomes deficit also, so your pilots are not getting trained as much.

But the morale, knowing that you do not have the up airplanes, like a Navy squadron on a carrier is likely to have 12 to 13 airplanes, with F-18's, F-14's, A-6's, A-7's, but generally 10 to 12 airplanes. If you have eight of those airplanes that are down because you cannot fix them, the pilots will take the two, but what does that mean for the other 20 pilots in that squadron that cannot fly because those airplanes are down? That morale, I sat on the Indian Ocean because we did not have Optar money to fly, and plus our machines were down. We were operating with 20-year-old Phantoms. That is like flying a World War I airplane in World War II. And the morale was terrible.

Mr. HUNTER. Reclaiming my time, I thank the gentleman for his observations, and will go to the second problem that the Clinton administration has with defense. The first problem is that under the scenario that we must live with, that is, the chance that two wars may break out simultaneously, we do not have a budget that will meet those two wars, and that is basically admitted by the Clinton administration when they talk about how we are going to have the ability, and listen carefully, to fight two nearly simultaneous wars, meaning if the North Koreans take advantage of a break-out somewhere else, and attack, that we are not going to be able to win with overwhelming force on the Korean Peninsula. That means a lot of American casualties.

The first problem that the Clinton administration has is they are not giving enough money to defense, they are cutting defense by 35 percent, and they are cutting the men and women in uniform, depriving them of the ability to win quickly and decisively in the battlefield, and thereby win a conflict with a minimum of casualties.

The second problem that the Clinton administration has is that even if we acknowledge, even if we accept their goal, their budget, and say, "OK, we agree that this type of equipment, this level of O&M funding, operations and maintenance, this number of tanks, this number of airplanes, this number of people is acceptable," we say it is not acceptable because we cannot win two simultaneously plus a small conflict, but even if we said it is acceptable, the President is not providing enough money to do it. He is underfunding the programs about $50 billion.

I want to ask the gentleman from California [Mr. CUNNINGHAM] to comment on this, because this is an Air Force quote from a senior Air Force official. I quote: "Twenty fighter wing equivalents," and that is what President Clinton promises, "make a lot of sense if we are going to fight in two places separated by the globe," the senior defense official said, "but because of the falling budget in the next couple of years the Air Force will either have to reduce the force to keep it sustainable or find other ways to fund production of new block 50 F-16's or F-15E's." He said, "These are the only two things I know how to do."

So you either have to cut the number of aircraft that you have, according to this senior official, under the Clinton budget, or we are going to have to come up with some new creative financing mechanism.

Could the gentleman comment on that?

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. It was not just the Air Force, it was the Commandant of the Air Corps and the Chief of Naval Operations, and they are exactly right. The funding levels for 1995 they are looking at, they can get by, but if we really do get in a conflict, and the Vice President, AL GORE, in his statement "Reinventing Government" made the statement that the cuts were based not on what we really needed to fight two wars, as it was supposed to be, but on the $127 billion Clinton cut.

Second, Dr. Warner, who did the Bottom-Up Review, in our hearing before the Committee on Armed Services also alluded to the fact that it was based on the $127 billion administration cut, not on what we need.

Even if you are doing similar to close to simultaneous wars, say it was Somalia, say that we got involved with Bosnia or India, or any of the other countries that could be a potential threat, to me that would send a signal, for example to North Korea, to come down across the parallel. What this cut is doing is risking not only the United States but it is risking the world.

Madam Speaker, what this cut is really doing, it is not only risking the national security of the United States, but it is risking the security of the world, whether it is Bosnia, Somalia, or other parts we might get into.

Equally critical, the $50 billion cut or shortfall that we have under the Bottom-Up Review is an administrative or accounting, because they did not charge inflationary rates, but we are still short that. We are short hundreds of billions of dollars just in operational and training time.

Something else that is not funded is the BRAC 1993.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. The base realignment and closure, because during the 1993 rounds there is not even the dollars to close those bases, take care of the environmental concerns, so that we can actually save dollars down the line.

Both the Marine Corps Commandant and the Chief of Naval Operations said unless we can get these facilities closed as the administration is planning, we will not reap the savings, so that what we will have down the line is no new airplanes, we will be totally out of business, both the Marine Corps, the Navy, and the Air Force.

Mr. KINGSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINGSTON. Madam Speaker, there is the other BRAC 1995 round that will be coming up soon, and as I understand it, the intention of that will be eventually every base and post in the United States will fill that, in some way, 50 percent of them directly. So what the gentleman is saying, if BRAC 1993 was not funded properly, then 1995 is going to get off course and may have to be more severe than it is already promised to be.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. If the gentleman will yield, it not only affects DOD and the number of personnel in the military, but infrastructure. For example, the Navy determines it needs 12 carriers to do its job. It needs to say, just like a business, "Where can I cut?" That is in infrastructure and that is in personnel those cuts will come. I do not care if you are a Republican or Democrat, your base is going to be looked at.

That equates to jobs, because defense means jobs in this country, and it also means national security. That is going to be brutal in 1995. We have not even funded 1993 yet.

Mr. HUNTER. Let me just say to the gentleman that that $50 billion cut, and we are undertaking a $50 billion shortfall in the Clinton budget in defense just to do what we have to do, is about 1 million jobs. A $50 billion cut is about 1 millions jobs.

Let me go to something that I think is also important here. That is confidence. In the 1980's, Americans had differences on many occasions with President Reagan and with President Bush, but one thing they had that allowed them to sleep a little bit better at night was the knowledge that under those two administrations they could be confident that we had a strong military. That means that if their son was out on a mission halfway around the world and was in the Marine Corps, he was out in some very difficult situation, they knew, number one, that their son had the best equipment you could find in the world today.

They knew, number two, that their son was accompanied by a lot of bright young men who had been selected through a very vigorous process to be Marines, for example, if he was in the Marine Corps, who had a high degree of education and had excellent, excellent leadership.

They knew that they were safe, they knew that they could sleep easily, because they had a strong national security. The American people during the 1980's learned that it is a truism that you achieve peace through strength. They had a lot of confidence, I think, in Secretary of Defense Dick Cheney, our last Secretary of Defense during Desert Storm. I think they had a lot of confidence in General Schwarzkopf, in Colin Powell, in the team that had been assembled under Presidents Reagan and Bush.

It is interesting, a lot of people decried President Reagan's so-called Star Wars initiative when he said, you know, "There are a lot of ballistic missiles around the world and they are making more all the time, and I think it might be important for us to learn how to shoot those down, because some of those might be incoming at some point."

I remember Presidential candidate Walter Mondale who said, "That is war in the heavens. Shooting down missiles, SDI, that is war in the heavens, and I will not engage in war in the heavens." Yet when we shot down those Scud missiles that were incoming at our troops in Desert Storm, I am sure that Walter Mondale said, "Because of Ronald Reagan, thank heavens." So the American people had a lot of confidence.

Today there is not cause for confidence under President Clinton and there is not cause for confidence, because President Clinton has, No. 1, refused to provide the numbers of equipment and men and women that are necessary to handle a dangerous world; that is, a two-conflict world, because you have to bet that if you are involved in a conflict somewhere, another guy may come and jump on you, knowing that you are vulnerable, knowing that your forces are occupied. The President has not given us a two-conflict force.

No. 2, he has not even funded the force he has given us. He is $50 billion short. What that means, I think it is important that the gentleman from Top Gun speak on this point, because what that really means, and we both know it, is that in the end, when we run short of money, the place where you can get cash fast is out of the spare parts account, out of the readiness account, where you repair your aircraft, and that means that more young men and women are going to die in a conflict or in training than if they had top-notch equipment.

I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. What is even worse is that where you have a force that is not trained properly, because it does not have the maintenance or the airplanes to fly, but when you have a foreign policy like Somalia that had 18 marines killed and 77 wounded, because they would not commit armor, where you have a policy where you want to commit the Marine Corps with sidearms only in Haiti, where you have a policy where you could get us into Bosnia, that will not do the United States any good, coupled with the depreciation of our Armed Forces, it is going to be terrible for us not only now but in the out-years as well.

And communities are going to suffer as well, not just the national security. So it is not just the cuts in defense, but it is the foreign policy and the strength of those decisions that are necessary. And yes, I include Lebanon under a republican President that to me was a tragedy that we put our Marines and let them get shelled and let them sit there without fully employing, and that was a disaster and a wrong decision as well. So I think it is not unique just to this administration. But we need a strong foreign policy that is going to protect our people. And we need the high-technology equipment, the manpower, and the training to go along with it.

You fight like you train. Unless you have the machines to train, then you are not going to be able to do any good.

Mr. HUNTER. I thank the gentleman.

I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. KINGSTON].

Mr. KINGSTON. I am sitting here listening to the two experts, and I am agreeing with everything they say. I think one of the things though that you have mentioned, but not directly, is that not only do you have to have consistency in terms of your training and in terms of your equipment maintenance and equipment, but you have to have consistency in terms of dealing with other international leaders. And if you tell the folks from other nations, whether they are our NATO allies or whoever, that we are going to do something, when you set a deadline you have to honor it, and you have to be the first one to do that. And that is one of the new criticisms that I think the United States is getting globally right now, is that we do not have the consistency and the follow-through internationally that we did under the Cheney first string that you were talking about earlier with the Schwarzkopfs of the world, and so forth.

Mr. HUNTER. I think the gentleman has stated it well when he talks about the first string. We have definitely had the first string in at that time, and I think the jury is out on the string that is in right now.

I am happy to yield to the gentleman from San Diego.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. In 1972, I wrote a book, and I wrote the book because I held some of my friends in my arms that died on a carrier. Some I was not able to because they were killed. And I can remember thinking,

> Don't the Members of Congress know what they are doing? Don't the liberals know that we don't want to be here but we need their support, we need better equipment, we need the parts to fly our airplanes because we are in combat, that we are not competing for six gold medals?

I also look at the potential of Somalia, and I wrote about it in Operation Proud Deep in which we were forced to fly in weather that is overcast because the North Vietnamese were coming down the Ho Chi Minh trail, and we had not been bombing North Vietnam, and we called back. I did not call back. I was a lieutenant junior grade at the time, but the admirals called back and said we cannot risk our pilots over an overcast because there are surface-to-air missiles. And they said no, those are the only 5 days you have. And in that time we lost a couple of dozen airplanes in 5 days. Why? Because the SA-2 missiles were coming up through the overcast, and it did not give us time to react. Second, if you flew underneath it, and remember it is wintertime in the Bosnia area right now, we would be skylighted against the clouds for their airplanes and the gunners knew our altitude, and it was devastating.

We also found our bomb damage assessment after the weather cleared that we had hit less than 1 percent of our targets. And I told the Secretary if he wanted to that I would take him at 600 knots over the Blue Ridge Mountains and put a million pieces of artillery. First, he would not see any of them. But if he was lucky enough to hit one, what good would it do, because they have a couple of million more.

For us to get into Somalia and wear out our equipment at a time when both sides of the aisle are trying to come up with a health plan, a crime bill, welfare reform, education, and H.R. 6 is coming up for education, can you imagine just the cost?

We stood on the House floor during the Somalia debate when this House extended the time in Somalia. They knew what it would cost. But yet they still wanted to stay there in Somalia through March when Aideed and all of his other henchmen are still going to be there at risk of life and cost. But guess what? We just had to provide a supplemental to pay for that when we could have used those dollars.

And when folks say we need to save dollars, we need to look and do that with the defense cuts.

Mr. HUNTER. I thank the gentleman.

IMMIGRATION POLICY

Mr. HUNTER. Let me move on to another area where the Clinton administration needs to form what I would call a national will, and that is immigration.

Under the leadership of LAMAR SMITH and CARLOS MOORHEAD and ELTON GALLEGLY, and I might say the gentleman from California [Mr. CUNNINGHAM]——

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. We are going from Bosnia to illegal immigration.

Mr. HUNTER. Yes, I knew you would like this smooth transition. But under the leadership of those gentlemen and all of the Members on this Republican task force on immigration, we put together an overall immigration plan which does a couple of things. First, it strengthens the border because there is no substitute for having an enforceable, strong border with border patrolmen with enough border patrolmen to stop illegal immigration.

Second, it cuts off what we would call the magnets of free social service, free education and all the welfare and social services that are bringing people across the border when they find out that they can make more by staying in bed all day as an illegal alien in the United States than putting in 8 hours of work in their native country.

And I want to speak just to one area of that particular Republican task force plan because it is important. We have to have a border. There is no substitute for a border. And no matter how you handle the social problems of illegal immigration, just the criminal alien aspect alone, that is criminals that come across from other countries into the United States to rob, rape, murder, and move narcotics, justifies having a border. And let me give a little example.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. We need to clarify that not everybody coming across the border illegally is doing that.

Mr. HUNTER. No. But there are a large number of criminal aliens who are coming across the border. And I want to describe a recent test that we took.

The INS took a number of criminal aliens, about 300 that had served their time in the United States, had been deported to Mexico City. Within a very short period of time we apprehended 10 percent of them, which means probably the rest of them got through, coming back across the Mexican-American border into the United States to continue their criminal enterprise. That means you have to have a border.

Let me just say to my friends that we have a 2,000-mile border in the Southwest, and in our district in San Diego, CA we have the smugglers' corridor. And that is the land, the international border between Tijuana to the south and San Diego to the north. And it is a stretch of land about 15 miles wide. It goes from the Pacific Ocean on the west to the California coastal hills to the east. And across that smugglers' corridor comes about half of the illegal aliens and illegal narcotics smuggled into this country.

We have learned a lot of things. One of the things we have learned as a result of this experience in building a fence across the smugglers' corridor, putting up lights, putting up a road and starting to get the number of border patrolmen we need to the border, one thing we have learned is we are going to need about 10,000 border patrolmen to control the border. There is no substitute for people.

Now I want to put this in context. The Clinton administration has funded about 4,500 border patrolmen for next year. They increased the contingent by 600 border patrolmen last year after an amendment was forced on them by the House of Representatives.

Mr. HUNTER. Which a number of us put forward. And that added 600 border patrolmen. So they basically dispersed the border patrolmen who had been forced on them by Congress, and they pumped the number up to 4,500 border patrolmen.

Our studies show that we need 10,000 border patrolmen because you have 12 smuggling corridors in the Southwest from San Diego to Tijuana and from Brownsville in Texas to Matamoros, and you have to have the number of people to put them on line to stop the illegal immigrants from coming in. Now we need 10,000 border patrolmen.

The Clinton administration has said they are going to give up 4,500. We are still about 6,000 short. At the same time we are cashiering out of the military about 2,000 young people every week. That means if we just took 3 weeks' worth of personnel slots where young marines, and Army, and Air Force and Coast Guard personnel are being cashiered, just 3 weeks of people who are being taken out of the Air Force and put those job slots in the border patrol, we would be able to stop illegal immigration in the Southwest.

Similarly, about 350,000 bureaucrats or Federal workers work in Washington, DC, not counting the Department of Defense.

If we took 6,000 of those slots, of those 350,000 people who work in Washington, DC, in administration doing paperwork, if we took just 6,000 of those slots and put them on the border, then we could stop illegal immigration. So illegal immigration, stopping illegal immigration, is not space-based lasers, it is not technical and does not require a lot of R&D. What it does require is national will.

I have looked forward to the Clinton administration, which has talked a very strong line on illegal immigration, and they have had good rhetoric, but I have looked forward to them providing the additional 6,000 border patrol agents. But to date the bill that provides the 6,000 border patrol agents is the Republican bill on immigration, and I hope that President Clinton will take this bill and work with us to see to it that we have the number of border patrolmen that we need.

I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Georgia and then my friend, the gentleman from California.

Mr. KINGSTON. I wanted to shore up what the gentleman is saying. I think it is important for people to realize that right now something like 22 to 24 percent of the prisoners in the Federal penal system are illegal immigrants, and that goes exactly into what the gentleman is saying that they many times have come to America to extend their criminal activities and take on new territory, if you will.

Mr. HUNTER. The gentleman is correct. We got a report from San Diego

County, and that is that 22 percent of the inmates in the county jails in San Diego County are illegal aliens. So we are spending an enormous amount of taxpayer money taking care of those folks, and if my friends would allow me, there is one other thing I would like to talk about that I think is very important to us which is coming up shortly.

First, I want to yield to my friend, the gentleman from California, because he has something else to say about immigration. Go ahead, before I make my transition.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. I am on the Education and Labor Committee with H.R. 6, and I will be happy to address it.

The only thing I would like to say is we need to be very careful when we talk and focus and let people know we are talking about illegal immigration, not normal immigration.

The United States has more legal immigration in the United States than all the other countries put together. But what we are talking about is the illegal immigration, and the effects on health care, law enforcement, and education, and they are here illegally, and that is what we want to stop. That is the only point I wanted to make.

Mr. KINGSTON. This will just take 30 seconds, but one of the things I have found out recently is that in Georgia we have 28,000 illegal immigrants, and we are not a border State in the sense of California or Texas where traditionally you think about that. But the number that we got in the illegal immigrations task force, as you remember, was $14 billion to $15 billion each year is lost directly as a result of our liberal public assistance programs going to illegal immigrants.

Mr. HUNTER. I thank the gentleman.

Let me talk briefly about H.R. 6 and just ask my friend, the gentleman from California [Mr. CUNNINGHAM], who is on the Education Committee, about a call that I got along with a lot of other calls. It was a teacher. She said, "You know, Congressman, I hear that they are going to offer a bill, H.R. 6, in Congress, that will force parents who are involved in education to be credentialed, to get certification of some kind." She said, "That is terrible." She said, "We teachers want parents to work with us in helping to educate their kids, and the idea that big government is going to take the teachers away just when they are really working with this in our particular school district makes no sense whatsoever."

I have gotten a lot of calls from folks who have said, "Doggone it, when we all agree the problem with society is parents are not having enough time with their kids, the idea government is going to say you cannot teach your own kid because they do not have the right government credentials does not make any sense at all."

I want to ask the gentleman to tell us about H.R. 6 and what it does do.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. H.R. 6 is monumental. There are over 200 different programs.

Mr. HUNTER. Tell us about the credentialing of parents.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. What the gentleman is talking about is an amendment was offered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. CLAYTON). The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER] has expired.

Pursuant to the Speaker's announced policy of February 11, 1994, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. KINGSTON] is recognized for 10 minutes as the minority leader's designee.

HEALTH CARE REFORM

Mr. KINGSTON. Madam Speaker, I would like to yield a few minutes to tie this up, and I want to invite both of the gentlemen to join me in discussion on health care. But let us talk about H.R. 6.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. I will be happy to. The amendment by the gentleman from California that offered it states that it will not affect private schools and home schooling, as the gentleman from California suggests. We feel differently.

There is going to be an amendment offered on the House floor and in the committee that will codify and clarify that rule, and it was not the general intent in H.R. 6 to do so. We think it will be taken care of.

Mr. HUNTER. If the gentleman will yield then, what you are saying is there will be an amendment that will be offered that will allow parents to continue to home school without having to be credentialed by some big brother or some government body?

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. At this time, that is the intent.

Mr. KINGSTON. I wanted to also just throw into that discussion the fact that if you look at the record of home schoolers, and there are statistics on this, they have a low dropout rate, very low teenage pregnancy rate, high college placement level, high SAT scores. It is one educational system that does seem to be working, and at the average cost of less than $500 per student. So it is a very, not just profamily, but very proeducation plan.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. If the gentleman will yield further, be very careful. I support home schooling and private institutions, but my wife is a principal in the public education system, and I know at her school they are doing a very good job.

Mr. KINGSTON. We have a lot of good public schools in our area, too, but I think it is important that anytime something is preceived as a threat to education that we all work for it, and one of the things that I am hearing from public and private and home schoolers in a uniform way is to keep the Federal Government out of our school system.

Mr. HUNTER. If the gentleman will yield for a minute, I do appreciate the fact that our great top gun has a wonderful wife, Nancy, who is a principal of a school. The only thing I have a question about is the fact that you make them take flight training at the age of 7. I think that may be a little extensive.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. That is only my daughters.

Mr. HUNTER. That is only your daughters? I am only kidding. I hope we do not get letters on flight training.

Mr. KINGSTON. One of the subjects we wanted to discuss earlier, and you two have been leaders in this, was the health care, and what I wanted to do, and you may have seen this article, but it was January 11 in the Wall Street Journal written by William Crystal.

One paragraph said so much, and I am going to read from it. It says,

> The passage of the Clinton health care plan in any form would be disastrous. It would guarantee an unprecedented Federal intrusion into the American economy. Its success would signal a rebirth of centralized welfare state policy at the very moment such policy is being perceived as failure in all other areas.

I thought that was such a good statement. But what was also interesting about it is Mr. Crystal goes on and outlines the reforms that he feels are necessary, and he said that in 1992 when Lloyd Bentsen was in the Senate, what he was an advocate of is only targeting the areas that were broken.

So, let us not rebuild the whole health care system according to now Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen, but let us just work on what is broken. Then he outlines the things that Bentsen supported as a U.S. Senator which were, which parallel many of the Michel ideas.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. If the gentleman would yield, I know my friend from California had a debate in California, and I would like him to discuss that.

But 85 percent of the American people like their health care plan, but they also realize that it needs a lot of fixes. One-third of the people not insured are basically your young people. When you were 18, you could not be told that you needed a health care plan. The other group is the people that are moving between jobs.

Both the Clinton plan and the Republican plan take care of portability and preexisting conditions.

Mr. HUNTER. Bring up preexisting. That is important.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Preexisting, and that is if you have a heart problem or cancer, it may be difficult for you to get a job, but if you change jobs with the new insurance plan, both of them take care of that, and that kind of reform where insurance cannot cut you off.

The last group is the important people we need to focus on, and that is the people who are too poor to provide for it. They are the working poor. But do we need to revamp the whole system, build a giant bureaucracy where the Government has control over lives? No. We do not.

I have a prediction that President Clinton's plan will not pass as it is, but that we are going to see a lot of modifications to it. But I think also that we are going to have in the end a lot of bipartisan support from Republicans and Democrats, and I have got a vision that we will produce a health care plan that will be healthy for this country.

Mr. HUNTER. If the gentleman will yield, I think that it is important for us to fix the problems that the gentleman has talked about, the preexisting. My mother-in-law has had three open-heart surgeries. It has been tough for them to get insurance.

The portability, that is the ability to carry your health insurance from one job to the other.

But the one thing that I am very much afraid of is Government taking over health care. I know that, because I have been on the defense committee, on the Committee on Armed Services, for a number of years. I have noticed that even though we build tanks and ships and planes, because we have to have them, Government does not do anything cheap. It always costs more than the private sector, and the thing that scared me last week was reading in the Washington Post about the hospitals in Canada which are now shutting down for so-called vacations because they have run out of money.

Mr. KINGSTON. Requiring a 12-day unpaid leave of absence.

Mr. HUNTER. Leave of absence.

The other thing that bothered me was seeing in Canada, which was supposed to be this workers' paradise of health care, specialized health care, there are 177,000 Canadians waiting for operations, and 44 percent of them surveyed say they are in some kind of pain.

Americans are pretty wary when somebody says, "I have got the Government solution for you." A lot of them say, "Hold on to your wallet." I am afraid if we give Government control of health care, we are going to have the same results Canada has had.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. I believe I have a parliamentary inquiry, Madam Speaker. Under the new rule, may this Member mention a Member from the other body if it is in a positive light?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. CLAYTON). The answer is "No."

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. No? Well, let me just say a Member from the other body——

Mr. HUNTER. Call him "Senator Positive."

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Senator Positive was giving a health care townhall meeting, and he told about a health care bureaucrat to whom he was talking, and the Senator said, "I care more for my children than you do, and I want to have control of where my child goes for health care and who gives that health care, because I care more." And the bureaucrat looked at Senator Positive and said, "No, you don't. I as a bureaucrat care more about your child than you do." Well, Senator Positive thought a second, he looked at the bureaucrat and said, "What are their names?" The point being that people want the individual right to choose a doctor and to choose the health care plan they want. They do not want to be thrown into a tank under several bureaucracies and be told what happens. Most of the American people, I believe, do not support that kind of health care. That is why I think we are going to wind up with a better health care plan. I look to the future, and I think we will end up with one that is a bipartisan plan that all of us can support.

Madam Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Some of the components that we are talking about which are some of the Michel ideas, the Republican ideas, and hopefully the bipartisan coalition emerging ideas, would be eliminating the preexisting illness that was talked about but also the Medisave accounts, the portability which the gentleman talked about, and also allowing vouchers for the working poor people under certain income brackets, some malpractice reform, the medical IRA's, full deductibility for health care premiums for small unincorporated businesses which right now are limited to 25 percent.

Mr. KINGSTON. Tort reform, insurance reform.

Mr. HUNTER. You know, one thing we have to remember as Members coming from California, we once had a workmen's compensation system to compensate people injured on the job. It was hailed as the euphoric new dream plan for workers. But it was so costly, so filled with fraud and Government cost so much, that in the end we drove literally thousands of businesses out of California because they could not afford this workmen's compensation system.

The workers who were supposed to be benefitted by this compensation system ended up with the worst benefit of all, which was no job. They lost their jobs because Government saddled employers with a burden which they could not carry.

I just hope that the Clinton administration does not jump forward and say we are going to increase taxes by 7.1 percent on only small businesses.

I had a business the other day who showed me $160,000 they had to pay to open the door. This is a business that employed about 15 people. They have to pay about $160,000 just to open their door. They said, "Hunter, if this giant health care plan passes this tax and puts this new tax on us, we are leaving, we cannot afford that." I hope that burden is not put on business.

Mr. KINGSTON. I think we are about out of time. But I know the gentleman from California has a point.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. You know, if you tell an employee, a union worker or a Federal employee, that everything they worked for in the health care plan is going to come under this alliance, they do not like it. Senior citizens do not like it, whom we call chronologically gifted.

I think these things certainly will be worked out, that we will end up with a bipartisan health care plan.

Mr. KINGSTON. Madam Speaker, I certainly appreciate the input of both gentlemen from California.

BLACK HISTORY MONTH

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. CLAYTON). Pursuant to the Speaker's announced policy of February 11, 1994, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. JEFFERSON] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. JEFFERSON. Madam Speaker, I rise today to acknowledge the 125th anniversary of the first speech delivered in the well of the U.S. House of Representatives by a duly elected African-American Member of Congress, John Willis Menard and to thank.

On February 27, 1869, Mr. Menard took the floor of the House to defend his right to represent the constituents of the Second District of the State of Louisiana, the same congressional district that I now represent, who elected Mr. Menard with 5,107 votes to 2,833 votes for his opponent.

For the 40 Members of today's Congressional Black Caucus and all African-Americans, this anniversary on Sunday should be one of joy and celebration, for it should represent the very first empowerment of African-Americans in our Government.

Unfortunately, this anniversary symbolizes the one-step forward, two-steps backward struggle African-Americans have faced in order to participate fully in the practice of representative democracy. You see, though soundly defeated by voters in the Second District, Mr. Menard's opponent, Caleb S. Hunt, contested the election before the House's Committee on Elections.

Despite presentation of Mr. Menard's official Certification of Election, the Committee on Elections rejected both Mr. Menard's legitimate claim to the seat from Louisiana's Second District and Mr. Hunt's dubious claim to election.

The decision came on a motion by Congressman James A. Garfield "that it was too early to admit a Negro to the U.S. Congress, and that the seat be declared vacant, and that the salary be divided equally between the two contestants."

Given an opportunity to present his case, Mr. Menard began:

> Mr. Speaker, I appear here more to acknowledge this high privilege than to make an argument before this House. It was certainly not my intention at first to take any part in this case at all; but as I have been sent here by the votes of nearly 9,000 electors, I would feel myself recreant to the duty imposed upon me if I did not defend their rights on this floor.
> I wish it to be well understood, before I go any further, that in the disposition of this case I do not expect, nor do I ask, that there shall be any favor shown me on account of my race, or the former condition of that race. I wish the case to be decided on its own merits and nothing else. . . .

Mr. Speaker, history will decide whether or not the 40th Congress showed Mr. Menard any special favor or fairness. Regardless, Mr. Menard's election and his subsequent speech on the floor of this hallowed hall embody the spirit of empowerment that still drives the African-American community today.

While it may have been deemed "too soon to admit a Negro to the U.S. Congress" in 1869, African-Americans took the second step toward full empowerment 1 year later in 1870 when Hiram Revels of Mississippi became the first black to serve in Congress as a Member of the U.S. Senate and James Rainey of South Carolina became the first black to serve in the House of Representatives.

Empowerment in Congress continued through 1901 when the departure of George H. White of North Carolina marked the first time in 31 years that African-Americans were not represented. In his final speech, Congressman White remarked prophetically:

> This, Mr. Chairman, is perhaps the Negroes' temporary farewell to the American Congress. But let me say, phoenix like, he will rise up someday and come again. These parting words are in behalf of an outraged, heartbroken, bruised and bleeding people, but God fearing people, faithful, industrious, loyal people . . . rising people full of potential.

It took 27 years, but the election of Oscar Stanton de Priest in 1928 by voters in Illinois' First District rekindled the empowerment of African-Americans in American government in much the same way Mr. Menard's election sparked the empowerment of African-Americans with his election to the U.S. Congress from the Second District in Louisiana in 1868, as the first African-American to be elected to Congress, and his historic speech 125 years ago.

I thank you, Madam Speaker, and I thank John Willis Menard.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—ECONOMIC REPORT OF THE PRESIDENT

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the President of the United States, which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, without objection, referred to the Joint Economic Committee and ordered to be printed:

ECONOMIC REPORT OF THE PRESIDENT

To the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate:

America has always thrived on change. We have used the opportunities it creates to renew ourselves and build our prosperity. But for too long and in too many ways, our Nation has been drifting.

For the last 30 years, family life in America has been breaking down. For the last 20 years, the real compensation of working Americans has grown at a disappointing rate. For 12 years a policy of trickle-down economics built a false prosperity on a mountain of Federal debt. As a result of our national drift, far too many American families, even those with two working parents, no longer dream the American dream of a better life for their children.

In 1992, the American people demanded change. A year ago, I sought your support for a comprehensive short-term and long-term strategy to restore the promise of our country's economic future. You responded, and together we replaced drift and gridlock with renewal and reform. Together we have taken the first necessary steps to restore growth in the living standards of all Americans. We have created a sound macroeconomic environment and strengthened the foundations of future economic growth. As a result of our efforts, the economy is now on a path of rising output, increasing employment, and falling deficits.

ESTABLISHING THE FISCAL CONDITIONS FOR SUSTAINED GROWTH

For more than a decade, the Federal Government has been living well beyond its means—spending much more than it has taken in, and borrowing the difference. The resulting deficits have been huge, both in sheer magnitude and as a percentage of the Nation's output. Since 1981 the Federal debt has been growing faster than the economy, reversing the trend of the previous three decades. As a consequence of this binge of deficit financing, Federal budget deficits have been gobbling up an inordinate share of the Nation's savings, driving up real long-term interests rates, discouraging private investment, and impeding long-run private sector growth.

On August 10, 1993, I signed the historic budget plan that you passed several days earlier. It will reduce Federal deficits by more than $500 billion. The plan is a balanced package of cuts in spending and increases in revenues. The spending cuts are specific, far-reaching, and genuine. They will reduce discretionary spending by over 12 percent in real terms in 5 years. The plan increases income tax rates for only the top 1.2 percent of taxpayers, the group of Americans who gained the most during the 1980s and are most able to pay higher taxes to help reduce the deficit. At the same time, a broad expansion of the earned income tax credit will help make work pay for up to 15 million American families. Nine out of ten small businesses will benefit from more-generous tax breaks that will help them invest and grow. And new, targeted capital gains tax relief will encourage investment in new small businesses.

Our deficit reduction plan has been the principal factor in the dramatic decline in long-term interest rates since my election in November 1992. Lower interest rates, in turn, have sparked an investment-driven economic expansion that has created more private sector jobs during the last year than were created during the previous four. The fact that investment is leading the recovery is good news for living standards, because investment is the key to productivity growth and hence to growth in real incomes for all Americans.

INVESTING IN OUR NATION'S FUTURE

Laying the macroeconomic groundwork for sustained growth is the government's first responsibility, but not its only responsibility. Government also has a vital role to play in providing some of the critical raw materials for economic growth: science and technology, an educated and well-trained work force, and public infrastructure. For much too long we have underinvested in these areas, in comparison both with our global competitors and with our own economic history. Our overall budget deficit has masked another, equally disturbing deficit—a deficit in the kinds of public investments that lay the foundations for private sector prosperity.

Like private investments, well-chosen public investments raise future living standards. As a consequence, deficit reduction at the expense of public investment has been and will continue to be self-defeating. That is why our budget package increases much-needed public investment even as it takes steps to reduce the budget deficit. One without the other will not work.

With the help of the Congress, our public investment initiatives in the areas of technology, infrastructure, the environment, and education and training received about 70 percent of the funding we requested in fiscal year 1994. We increased funding for such proven successes as Head Start and the WIC program in the human resources area, and the Advanced Technology Program of the National Institute of Standards and Technology in the area of technological research. We also launched a number of new initiatives, including the National Service program, a new program of empowerment zones and enterprise communities for urban and rural development, and several new technology programs, including the Technology Reinvestment Project, designed to help defense contractors retool to serve civilian markets. We increased funding for research into new environmental technologies. In addition, we developed a comprehensive, cost-effective Climate Change Action Plan, comprising nearly 50 initiatives to reduce U.S. greenhouse gas emissions to 1990 levels by the year 2000.

As these examples bear witness, we have made significant progress on our investment agenda, but much more remains to be done. We will have to work together to find room to fund essential new investments even as we reduce real government outlays to meet tight annual caps on discretionary spending. This will not be easy. But it is essential, for we face a dual challenge—we must fundamentally change the composition of discretionary spending even as we reduce it in real terms.

This year my Administration is requesting funding for several new investment initiatives. Our Goals 2000 proposal will encourage local innovation in and accelerate the pace of school reform. It will link world-class academic and occupational standards to grassroots education reforms all across America. Our School-to-Work initiative will provide opportunities for post-secondary training for those not going on to college. Our reemployment and training program will streamline today's patchwork of training programs and make them a source of new skills for people who lose their jobs. Finally, our proposed welfare reform will provide the support, job training, and child care necessary to move people off welfare after 2 years. That is the only way we will make welfare what it ought to be: a second chance, not a way of life.

REFORMING OUR HEALTH CARE SYSTEM

This year we will also make history by reforming the Nation's health care system. We face a health care crisis that demands a solution, both for the health of our citizens and for the health of our economy over the long run. The United States today spends more on health care relative to the size of its economy than any other advanced industrial country. Yet we insure a smaller fraction of our population, and we rank poorly on important overall health indicators such as life expectancy and infant mortality. Over 15 percent of Americans—nearly 39 million people—were uninsured throughout 1992. And tens of millions more have inadequate insurance or risk becoming uninsured should they lose their jobs. Meanwhile health care costs continue to climb, increasing premiums and medical bills for American families and aggravating budget crises at all levels of government. Both the Office of Management and Budget and the Congressional Budget Office have concluded that unless the system is reformed, rising health care costs will begin pushing the Federal budget deficit back upward as this century comes to a close.

Piecemeal approaches to solving our health care crisis will not work. If we simply squeeze harder on Federal health spending, without attempting systemwide reform, more of the costs of covering health services guaranteed by the government will be shifted to the private sector, and medical care for the elderly, the disadvantaged, and the disabled will be put at risk. Similarly, if we attempt to provide universal coverage without complementary measures to improve competition and sharpen incentives for cost-conscious decisions, costs will continue to escalate.

Our health care reform proposal, while bold and comprehensive, builds on the strengths of our current, market-based system. Our approach preserves consumer choice and our largely employer-based private insurance arrangements. It relies on market competition and private incentives, not price controls and bureaucracy, to provide health security for all Americans, to rein in health care costs, and to solve our long-run budget deficit problem.

OPENING FOREIGN MARKETS

Raising the living standards of all Americans is the fundamental economic goal of my Administration. That is why all of our initiatives in international trade share a common purpose: to open markets and promote American exports. This emphasis on exports is driven by two simple facts. First, America is part of an increasingly integrated world economy and must adapt to this new reality if we are to stay on top. There is simply no way to close our borders and return to the insular days of the 1950s. To try to do so would be an exercise in futility, doomed not only to fail but to lower living standards in the process. Second, export industries offer the kind of high-wage, high-skill jobs the country needs. By shifting production toward more exports, we will shift the composition of employment toward better jobs. In short, to realize our goal of higher living standards for all Americans, we must compete, not retreat.

The year just past will go down in the history books as a watershed for trade liberalization. With your help, we enacted the North American Free Trade Agreement, which links the United States, Canada, and Mexico together in the world's largest marketplace. We also successfully completed the Uruguay Round of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, which promises to add as much as $100 billion to $200 billion to the Nation's output by the end of a decade. And we are now on a course of increasing trade and investment liberalization with the rapidly growing economies of East Asia and the Pacific, which will be a major source of new export opportunities for American products in the coming years. At home we have eliminated much of our export control system and have rationalized our export promotion activities to help our producers, workers, and farmers increase their sales around the world.

IMPROVING THE EFFICIENCY OF GOVERNMENT

My Administration is committed to improving the Federal government's efficiency across the board. The National Performance Review (NPR), completed under the bold leadership of Vice President Gore, provides a road map for what must be done. The NPR's report shows how substantial budgetary savings can be realized by making existing programs more efficient and cutting those that are no longer necessary. As a result of our efforts to reinvent how the government performs, we will reduce the Federal bureaucracy by 252,000 positions, bringing it down to the lowest level in decades.

My Administration is also committed to reducing the burden of government regulations by improving the regulatory review process. My Executive Order on Regulatory Planning and Review requires that all new regulations carefully balance costs and benefits, that only those regulations whose benefits exceed their costs be adopted, and that in each case the most cost-effective regulations be chosen.

This year we will also work with the Congress to develop the new regulatory framework required to encourage the development of the national information superhighway. We must cooperate with the private sector to connect every classroom, every library, and every hospital in America to this highway by the year 2000. Rapid access to the most advanced information available will increase productivity and living standards, help to educate our children, and help health providers improve medical care for our citizens.

THE ECONOMIC OUTLOOK

An economic strategy built on long-run investments will not bear fruit overnight. But there are already signs that our policy initiatives are beginning to pay off. Prospects for sustained economic expansion look far brighter now than they did a year ago, when my Administration first asked for your support. Growth of real gross domestic product increased steadily over the course of 1993, and the economic expansion has continued into 1994. Consumer spending should remain healthy because of continued gains in employment and output, and investment spending should remain strong because of low long-term interest rates and increasing levels of demand. Low interest rates will also continue to support the recent expansion in residential construction. The Administration forecasts that the economy will grow at 3 percent in 1994 and will remain on track to create 8 million jobs over 4 years.

As 1994 begins, our economy is strong and growing stronger. With continued deficit reduction, more public investment, a reformed health care system, increased exports, and a reinvented government, we can create the foundations for an even more prosperous America.

Use of tobacco products has been linked to serious health problems. However, because the nicotine in tobacco is an addictive substance, many tobacco users find it difficult to stop using tobacco once they have started. Drug education and prevention programs that include tobacco have been effective in reducing teenage use of tobacco. Drug prevention programs for youth that address only controlled drugs send an erroneous message that the use of tobacco does not have adverse consequences. To be credible, messages opposing illegal drug use by youth should also address other harmful substances.

—Title III

Insert new Part .

SEC. . SHORT TITLE.

This part may be cited as the "National Center for Second Language Development Act."

SEC. . FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that:

1. At a time when international opportunities and challenges are escalating, there exists no national education effort to develop second language capabilities in the United States.

2.1. In the present international economic context, it is critical for Americans to become skilled speakers of other languages.

2. There is a widespread recognition of this need, but little awareness of important advances in the technology of language instruction and in our understanding of the processes involved in acquiring a second language.

3. These technological and conceptual advances need to be incorporated in language instruction and in the professional development of language teachers.

4. The technological and conceptual advances currently in use and being developed in the second language arena can improve our ability to instruct the millions of immigrant school children and adults who have limited proficiency in English. Without fluency in the English language these individuals remain an untapped national resource.

5. The concentration of talent focused on research on second language acquisition, language instruction, teaching technology, and curriculum development and publications housed at the Defense Language Institute (DLI—a teaching facility of the Department of Defense, located in Monterey, California), provides an optimal environment for the incipient development of a nationwide effort in second language training and acquisition.

SEC. . PURPOSE.

It is the purpose of this part to—

1. implement advances in research and technology in the language education of children, college students, and adults and in the professional development of language instructors.

SEC. . NATIONAL CENTER FOR SECOND LANGUAGE DEVELOPMENT.

a. ESTABLISHMENT. In order to better effectuate the purposes of this part through assistance in the coordination of services and programs provided for under this part, the Secretary shall establish a National Center for Second Language Development.

1. The Defense Language Institute.

2. Other public, government and private entities with expertise in the education and training of second language curricula, as determined necessary by the Secretary.

c. MISSION. The Center shall:

1. Study the current potential for second language capabilities of the population of the United States;

2. Make recommendations to the Secretary from that study the most appropriate means of increasing widespread second language capabilities in the United States;

3. Implement pilot programs to effectuate a greater second language capability within the United States.

"(2) ELIGIBILITY.—A local educational agency shall be eligible to receive assistance under this subsection only if Federal property in such agency comprised 25 percent or more of the total land area within such agency during the preceding fiscal year.

"(3) MAXIMUM AMOUNT.—The amount that a local educational agency may receive under this subsection for a fiscal year may not exceed the difference of—

TITLE VI—PROGRAM STRATEGIES

SEC. 601. INNOVATIVE PROGRAM STRATEGIES.

Part E of title II of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, as amended by section 101 of this Act, is further amended to read as follows:

"PART E—EDUCATION PROGRAM STRATEGIES

"SEC. 2401. FINDINGS AND STATEMENT OF PURPOSE.

"(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that chapter 2 of the Education Consolidation and Improvement Act of 1981 has been successful in achieving the goals of increasing local flexibility, reducing administrative burden, providing services for private school students, encouraging innovation, and contributing to the improvement of elementary and secondary educational programs.

"(b) STATEMENT OF PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of programs under this part:

"(1) To support local education reform efforts which are consistent with and support statewide reform efforts under Goals 2000.

"(2) To support State and local efforts to accomplish the National Education Goals.

"(3) To provide funding to enable State and local educational agencies to implement promising educational reform programs that can be supported by State and local sources of funding after such programs are demonstrated to be effective.

"(4) To provide a continuing source of innovation, educational improvement, and support for library services and instructional materials, including media materials and,

"(5) To meet the special educational needs of at risk and high cost students.

"(c) STATE AND LOCAL RESPONSIBILITY.—The basic responsibility for the administration of funds made available under this part is within the State educational agencies, but it is the intent of Congress that the responsibility be carried out with a minimum of paperwork and that the responsibility for the design and implementation of programs assisted under this part will be mainly that of local educational agencies, school superintendents and principals, and classroom teachers and supporting personnel, because they have the most direct contact with students and are most likely to be able to design programs to meet the educational needs of students in their own districts.

"SEC. 2402. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS; DURATION OF ASSISTANCE.

"(a) AUTHORIZATION.—To carry out the purposes of this part, there are authorized to be appropriated $435,000,000 for fiscal year 1995 and such sums in each of the fiscal years 1996 through 1999.

"(b) DURATION OF ASSISTANCE.—During the period beginning October 1, 1994, and ending, September 30, 1999, the Secretary shall, in accordance with the provisions of this part, make payments to State educational agencies for the purpose of this section.

"Subpart 1—State and Local Programs

"SEC. 2411. ALLOTMENT TO STATES.

"(a) RESERVATIONS.—From the sums appropriated to carry out this subpart in any fiscal year, the Secretary shall reserve not to exceed 1 percent for payments to Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and the Northern Mariana Islands, to be allotted in accordance with their respective needs.

"(b) ALLOTMENT.—From the remainder of such sums the Secretary shall allot to each State an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount of such remainder as the school-age population of the State bears to the school-age population of all States, except that no State shall receive less than an amount equal to one-half of 1 percent of such remainder.

"(c) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this subpart—

"(1) The term 'school-age population' means the population aged 5 through 17.

"(2) The term 'States' includes the 50 States, the District of Columbia, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

"SEC. 2412. ALLOCATION TO LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES.

"(a) DISTRIBUTION RULE.—From the sums made available each year to carry out this part, the State educational agency shall distribute not less than 85 percent to local educational agencies within such State according to the relative enrollments in public and private, nonprofit schools within the school districts of such agencies, adjusted, in accordance with criteria approved by the Secretary, to provide higher per pupil allocations to local educational agencies which have the greatest numbers or percentages of children whose education imposes a higher than average cost per child, such as—

"(1) children living in areas with high concentrations of low-income families,

"(2) children from low-income families, and

"(3) children living in sparsely populated areas.

"(b) CALCULATION OF ENROLLMENTS.—(1) The calculation of relative enrollments under subsection (a) shall be on the basis of the total of—

"(A) the number of children enrolled in public schools, and

"(B) the number of children enrolled in private nonprofit schools that desire that their children participate in programs or projects assisted under this part, for the fiscal year preceding the fiscal year in which the determination is made. Nothing in this subsection shall diminish the responsibility of local educational agencies to contact, on an annual basis, appropriate officials from private nonprofit schools within the areas served by such agencies in order to determine whether such schools desire that their children participate in programs assisted under this part.

"(2)(A) Relative enrollments under subsection (a) shall be adjusted, in accordance with criteria approved by the Secretary under subparagraph (B), to provide higher per pupil allocations only to local educational agencies which serve the greatest numbers or percentages of—

"(i) children living in areas with high concentrations of low-income families,

"(ii) children from low-income families, or

"(iii) children living in sparsely populated areas.

"(B) The Secretary shall review criteria submitted by a State educational agency for adjusting allocations under paragraph (1) and shall approve such criteria only if the Secretary determines that such criteria are reasonably calculated to produce an adjusted allocation that reflects the relative needs within the State's local educational agencies based on the factors set forth in subparagraph (A).

"(c) PAYMENT OF ALLOCATIONS.—

"(1) From the funds paid to it pursuant to section 2402 for a fiscal year, a State educational agency shall distribute to each eligible local educational agency which has submitted an application as required in section 2423 the amount of its allocation as determined under subsection (a).

"(2)(A) Additional funds resulting from higher per pupil allocations provided to a local educational agency on the basis of adjusted enrollments of children described in subsection (a), may, at the discretion of the local educational agency, be allocated for expenditures to provide services for children enrolled in public and private nonprofit school in direct proportion to the number of children described in subsection (a) and enrolled in such schools within the local educational agency.

"(B) In any fiscal year, any local educational agency that elects to allocate such additional funds in the manner described in subparagraph (A) shall allocate all additional funds to schools within the local educational agency in such manner.

"(C) The provisions of subparagraphs (A) and (B) may not be construed to require any school to limit the use of such additional funds to the provision of services to specific students or categories of students.

—Sec. 1113.

I am submitting the following amendment to the Sec. 1113 "Eligible School Attendance Areas" of H.R. 6 because as it is currently written, school districts under a desegregation order of voluntary desegregation plan do not use "geographical area" as the criteria for defining school attendance area. Instead, they can be based on census tract data, or other data. These school districts would thus not be able to continue funding for otherwise eligible students because of the language in H.R. 6. This is clearly not the intent of the bill, and I think this must be corrected. There are currently 41 schools in my district served by Chapter 1. H.R. 6 would limit that number to 25, and would discontinue funds for 1200 eligible students in my district. I am submitting this amendment to correct this unintended inequity.

SEC. 2403. DEFINITION.

For the purposes of this part the term "effective schools programs" means school-based programs that may encompass preschool through secondary school levels and that have the objectives of (1) promoting school-level planning, instructional improvement, and staff development, (2) increasing the academic achievement levels of all children and particularly educationally deprived children, and (3) achieving as ongoing conditions in the school the following factors identified through effective schools research as distinguishing effective from ineffective schools:

(1) strong and effective administrative and instructional leadership that creates consensus on instructional goals and organizational capacity for instructional problem solving;

(2) emphasis on the acquisition of basic and higher order skills;

(3) a safe and orderly school environment that allows teachers and pupils to focus their energies on academic achievement;

(4) a climate of expectation that virtually all children can learn under appropriate conditions; and

(5) continuous assessment of students and programs to evaluate the effects of instruction.

"Subpart 5—General Administrative Provisions

"SEC. 2451. MAINTENANCE OF EFFORT; FEDERAL FUNDS SUPPLEMENTARY.

"(a) MAINTENANCE OF EFFORT.—(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), a State is entitled to receive its full allocation of funds under this part for any fiscal year if the Secretary finds that either the combined fiscal effort per student or the aggregate expenditures within the State with respect to the provision of free public education for the preceding fiscal year was not less than 90 percent of such combined fiscal effort or aggregate expenditures for the second preceding fiscal year.

"(2) The Secretary shall reduce the amount of the allocation of funds under this part in any fiscal year in the exact proportion to which the State fails to meet the requirements of paragraph (1) by falling below 90 percent of both the fiscal effort per student and aggregate expenditures (using the measure most favorable to the State), and no such lesser amount shall be used for computing the effort required under paragraph (1) for subsequent years.

"(3) The Secretary may waive, for 1 fiscal year only, the requirements of this subsection if the Secretary determines that such a waiver would be equitable due to exceptional or uncontrollable circumstances such as a natural disaster or a precipitous and unforeseen decline in the financial resources of the State.

"(b) FEDERAL FUNDS SUPPLEMENTARY.—A State or local educational agency may use and allocate funds received under this part only so as to supplement and, to the extent practical, increase the level of funds that would, in the absence of Federal funds made available under this part, be made available from non-Federal sources, and in no case may such funds be used so as to supplant funds from non-Federal sources.

"SEC. 2252. PARTICIPATION OF CHILDREN ENROLLED IN PRIVATE SCHOOLS.

"(a) PARTICIPATION ON EQUITABLE BASIS.—(1) To the extent consistent with the number of children in the school district of a local educational agency which is eligible to receive funds under this part or which serves the area in which a program or project assisted under this part is located who are enrolled in private nonprofit elementary and secondary schools, or with respect to instructional or personnel training programs funded by the State educational agency from funds reserved for State use, such agency, after consultation with appropriate private school officials, shall provide for the benefit of such children in such schools secular, neutral, and nonideological services, materials, and equipment, including the participation of the teachers of such children (and other educational personnel serving such children) in training programs, and the repair, minor remodeling, or construction of public facilities as may be necessary for their provision (consistent with subsection (c) of this section), or, if such services, materials, and equipment are not feasible or necessary in one or more such private schools as determined by the local educational agency after consultation with the appropriate private school officials, shall provide such other arrangements as will assure equitable participation of such children in the purposes and benefits of this part.

"(2) If no program or project is carried out under subsection (a)(1) of this section in the school district of a local educational agency, the State educational agency shall make arrangements, such as through contracts with nonprofit agencies or organizations, under which children in private schools in that district are provided with services and materials to the extent that would have occurred if the local educational agency had received funds under this part.

"(3) The requirements of this section relating to the participation of children, teachers, and other personnel serving such children shall apply to programs and projects carried out under this part by a State or local educational agency, whether directly or through grants to or contracts with other public or private agencies, institutions, or organizations.

"(b) Equal Expenditures.—Expenditures for programs pursuant to subsection (a) shall be equal (consistent with the number of children to be served) to expenditures for programs under this part for children enrolled in the public schools of the local educational agency, taking into account the needs of the individual children and other factors which relate to such expenditures, and when funds available to a local educational agency under this part are used to concentrate programs or projects on a particular group, attendance area, or grade or age level, children enrolled in private schools who are included within the group, attendance area, or grade or age level selected for such concentration shall, after consultation with the appropriate private school officials, be assured equitable participation in the purposes and benefits of such programs or projects.

"(c) Funds.—(1) The control of funds provided under this part, and title to materials, equipment, and property repaired, remodeled, or constructed therewith, shall be in a public agency for the uses and purposes provided in this part, and a public agency shall administer such funds and property.

"(2) The provision of services pursuant to this section shall be provided by employees of a public agency or through contract by such public agency with a person, an association, agency, or corporation who or which, in the provision of such services, is independent of such private school and of any religious organizations, and such employment or contract shall be under the control and supervision of such public agency, and the funds provided under this part shall not be commingled with State or local funds.

"(d) State Prohibition Waiver.—If by reason of any provision of law a State or local educational agency is prohibited from providing for the participation in programs of children enrolled in private elementary and secondary schools, as required by this section, the Secretary shall waive such requirements and shall arrange for the provision of services to such children through arrangements which shall be subject to the requirements of this section.

"(e) Waiver and Provision of Services.—(1) If the Secretary determines that a State or a local educational agency has substantially failed or is unwilling to provide for the participation on an equitable basis of children enrolled in private elementary and secondary schools as required by this section, the Secretary may waive such requirements and shall arrange for the provision of services to such children through arrangements which shall be subject to the requirements of this section.

"(2) Pending final resolution of any investigation or complaint that could result in a determination under this subsection or subsection (d), the Secretary may withhold from the allocation of the affected State or local educational agency the amount estimated by the Secretary to be necessary to pay the cost of those services.

"(f) Determination.—Any determination by the Secretary under this section shall continue in effect until the Secretary determines that there will no longer be any failure or inability on the part of the State or local educational agency to meet the requirements of subsections (a) and (b).

"(g) Payment From State Allotment.—When the Secretary arranges for services pursuant to this section, the Secretary shall, after consultation with the appropriate public and private school officials, pay the cost of such services, including the administrative costs of arranging for those services, from the appropriate allotment of the State under this part.

"(h) Review.—(1) The Secretary shall not take any final action under this section until the State educational agency and the local educational agency affected by such action have had an opportunity, for at least 45 days after receiving written notice thereof, to submit written objections and to appear before the Secretary or the Secretary's designee to show cause why that action should not be taken.

"(2) If a State or local educational agency is dissatisfied with the Secretary's final action after a proceeding under paragraph (1) of this subsection, it may, within 60 days after notice of such action, file with the United States court of appeals for the circuit in which such State is located a petition for review of that action. A copy of the petition shall be forthwith transmitted by the clerk of the court to the Secretary. The Secretary thereupon shall file in the court the record of the proceedings on which the Secretary based this action, as provided in section 2112 of title 28, United States Code.

"(3) The findings of fact by the Secretary, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive; but the court, for good cause shown, may remand the case to the Secretary to take further evidence and the Secretary may thereupon make new or modified findings of fact and may modify the Secretary's previous action, and shall file in the court the record of the further proceedings. Such new or modified findings of fact shall likewise be conclusive if supported by substantial evidence.

"(4) Upon the filing of such petition, the court shall have jurisdiction to affirm the action of the Secretary or to set it aside, in whole or in part. The judgment of the court shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code.

"(i) Prior Determination.—Any bypass determination by the Secretary under chapter 2 of the Education Consolidation and Improvement Act of 1981 shall, to the extent consistent with the purposes of this chapter, apply to programs under this chapter.

"SEC. 2253. EVALUATIONS AND REPORTING.

"(a) Local Educational Agencies.—A local educational agency which receives financial assistance under this part shall report annually to the State educational agency on the use of funds under section 2431. Such reporting shall be carried out in a manner which minimizes the amount of paperwork required while providing the State educational agency with the necessary information under the preceding sentence. Such report shall be made available to the public.

"(b) State Educational Agencies.—A State educational agency which receives financial assistance under this part shall evaluate the effectiveness of State and local programs under this part in accordance with section 2423(a)(2)(B). (b) Rulemaking.—The Secretary shall issue regulations under this part only to the extent that such regulations are necessary to ensure that there is compliance with the specific requirements and assurances required by this part.

"(1) that the United States owns Federal property in the local educational agency, and that such property—

"(A) has been acquired by the United States since 1938;

"(B) was not acquired by exchange for other Federal property in the local educational agency which the United States owned before 1939; and

"(C) had an assessed value (determined as of the time or times when so acquired) aggregating 10 percent or more of the assessed value of all real property in the local educational agency (similarly determined as of the time or times when such Federal property was so acquired); and

"(2) that such agency is not being substantially compensated for the loss in revenue resulting from such ownership by increases in revenue accruing to the agency from the conduct of Federal activities with respect to such Federal property, then such agency shall be paid the amount described in subsection (b).

"(b) AMOUNT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—(A) The amount that a local educational agency shall be paid under subsection (a) for a fiscal year shall be calculated in accordance with paragraph (2), except that such amount shall be reduced by the Secretary by an amount equal to the amount of revenue, if any, that such agency received from activities conducted on such property during the previous fiscal year.

"(B) If funds appropriated under section 8013(a) are insufficient to pay the amount determined under subparagraph (A), the Secretary shall ratably reduce the payment to each eligible local educational agency.

"(C) Notwithstanding any other provision of this subsection, a local educational agency may not be paid an amount under this section which exceeds the difference of—

"(i) the maximum amount that such agency is eligible to receive for such fiscal year under section 8004(b)(1)(C); and

"(ii) the amount that such agency receives in such fiscal year under section 8004(b)(2).

"(2) APPLICATION OF CURRENT LEVIED REAL PROPERTY TAX RATE.—In calculating the amount that a local educational agency shall be paid for a fiscal year, the Secretary shall apply the current levied real property tax rate for current expenditures levied by fiscally independent local educational agencies or imputed, for fiscally dependent local educational agencies, to the current annually determined aggregate assessed value of such acquired Federal property.

"(3) DETERMINATION OF AGGREGATE ASSESSED VALUE.—Such aggregate assessed value of such acquired Federal property shall be determined (on the basis of the highest and best use of property adjacent to such acquired Federal property as of the time such value is determined), and provided to the Secretary, by the local official responsible for assessing the value of real property located in the jurisdiction of such local educational agency for the purpose of levying a property tax.

"(c) APPLICABILITY TO TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY ACT.—For the purposes of this section, any real property with respect to which payments are being made under section 13 of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933 shall not be regarded as Federal property.

"(d) OWNERSHIP BY UNITED STATES.—The United States shall be deemed to own Federal property for the purposes of this Act, where—

"(1) prior to the transfer of Federal property, the United States owned Federal property meeting the requirements of subparagraphs (A), (B), and (C) of subsection (a)(1); and

"(A) the eligibility of a local educational agency for State aid for free public education; or

"(B) the amount of such aid; or

"(2) make such aid available to local educational agencies in a manner that results in less State aid to any local educational agency that is eligible for such payment than it would receive if it were not so eligible.

"(1) In general.—A State may reduce State aid to a local educational agency that receives a payment under sections 8003 and 8004(b) (except the amount calculated in excess of 1.0 under subparagraph (B) of subsection (a)(2)) or under the Act of September 30, 1950 (Public Law 874, 81st Congress) as such Act existed prior to the enactment of the Improving America's Schools Act of 1994 (other than an increase in payments described in paragraphs (2)(B), (2)(C), (2)(D), or (3)(B)(ii) of section 3(d) of such Act of September 30, 1950) for any fiscal year if the Secretary determines, and certifies under subsection (c)(3)(A), that such State has in effect a program of State aid that equalizes expenditures for free public education among local educational agencies in such State.

"(2) Computation.—

"(A) In general.—For purposes of paragraph (1), a program of State aid equalizes expenditures among local educational agencies if, in the second preceding fiscal year, the amount of per-pupil expenditures made by, or per-pupil revenues available to, the local educational agency in the State with the highest such per-pupil expenditures or revenues did not exceed the amount of such per-pupil expenditures made by, or per-pupil revenues available to, the local educational agency in the State with the lowest such expenditures or revenues by more than 10 percent.

"(i) disregard local educational agencies with per-pupil expenditures or revenues above the 95th percentile or below the 5th percentile of such expenditures or revenues in the State; and

"(ii) take into account the extent to which a program of State aid reflects the additional cost of providing free public education in particular types of local educational agencies, such as those that are geographically isolated, or to particular types of students, such as children with disabilities.

"(3) Exception.—Notwithstanding paragraph (2), if the Secretary determines that the State has substantially revised its program of State aid, the Secretary may certify such program for any fiscal year only if—

"(A) the Secretary determines, on the basis of projected data, that the State's program will meet the 10 percent disparity standard described in paragraph (2) in that fiscal year; and

"(B) the State provides an assurance to the Secretary that, if final data do not demonstrate that the State's program met such standard for that year (or that it met such standard with a greater percentage of disparity than anticipated), the State will pay to each affected local educational agency the amount by which it reduced State aid to the local educational agency on the basis of such certification, or a proportionate share thereof, as the case may be.

"(c) Procedures for Review of State Equalization Plans.—

"(1) Written notice.—

"(A) In general.—Any State that wishes to consider payments described in subsection (b)(1) in providing State aid to local educational agencies shall submit to the Secretary, not later than 120 days before the beginning of the State's fiscal year, a written notice of its intention to do so.

"(2) Opportunity to present views.—Before making a determination under subsection (b), the Secretary shall afford the State, and local educational agencies in the State, an opportunity to present their views.

"(3) Qualification procedures.—If the Secretary determines that a program of State aid qualifies under subsection (b), the Secretary shall—

"(A) certify the program and so notify the State; and

"(B) afford an opportunity for a hearing, in accordance with section 8011(a), to any local educational agency adversely affected by such certification.

"(4) Non-qualification procedures.—If the Secretary determines that a program of State aid does not qualify under subsection (b), the Secretary shall—

"(e) Remedies for State Violations.—

The clerk of the court shall promptly transmit a copy of the petition to the Secretary. The Secretary shall then file in the court the record of the proceedings on which the Secretary's action was based, as provided in section 2112 of title 28, United States Code.

"(2) Findings of fact.—The findings of fact by the Secretary, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive, but the court, for good cause shown, may remand the case to the Secretary to take further evidence. The Secretary may thereupon make new or modified findings of fact and may modify the Secretary's previous action, and shall file in the court the record of the further proceedings. Such new or modified findings of fact shall likewise be conclusive if supported by substantial evidence.

"(3) Review.—The court shall have exclusive jurisdiction to affirm the action of the Secretary or to set it aside, in whole or in part. TITLE I—AMENDMENTS TO THE ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY EDUCATION ACT OF 1965

"SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

"This Act may be cited as the "Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965".

"TITLE I—HELPING CHILDREN IN NEED MEET HIGH STANDARDS

"SEC. 1001. DECLARATION OF POLICY AND STATEMENT OF PURPOSE.

"(a) STATEMENT OF POLICY.—The Congress declares it to be the policy of the United States that a high-quality education for all citizens and a fair and equal opportunity to obtain that education—

"(1) are a societal good necessary for creating a vibrant future for our complex and diverse democracy and for meeting the challenge of an internationally competitive economy;

"(2) are a private good because individual opportunity is greatly enhanced by one's being well educated;

"(3) are a moral imperative in our society; simple justice demands that the opportunity to acquire skills and knowledge deemed necessary for basic citizenship and economic opportunity be equally available to all; and

"(4) improve the life of every citizen, because the quality of our individual lives ultimately depends on the quality of the lives of others.

"(b) RECOGNITION OF NEED.—The Congress recognizes that—

"(1) although the achievement gap between disadvantaged children and other children has been reduced by half over the past two decades, a sizeable gap remains, and many segments of our society lack the opportunity to become well educated;

"(2) the most urgent need for educational improvement is in schools with high concentrations of children from low-income families. Achieving the National Education Goals will not be possible without substantial improvement in these schools;

"(3) educational needs are particularly great for low-achieving children in our highest-poverty schools, children with limited English proficiency, children with disabilities, children of migrant workers, Indian children, children who are neglected or delinquent, and young children and their parents who are in need of family-literacy services; and

"(4) while title I and other programs funded under this Act have contributed to narrowing the achievement gap between children in high-poverty and low-poverty schools, they need to become even more effective in improving high-poverty schools in order to help enable all children to achieve high standards.

"(c) WHAT HAS BEEN LEARNED.—To enable schools to provide all children a high-quality education, this title builds upon what has been learned:

"(1) All children can master challenging content and complex problem-solving skills; research clearly shows that children, including low-achieving children, can succeed when expectations are high and they are given the opportunity to learn challenging material.

"(2) Piecemeal reform, particularly when not tied to an overall vision of teaching to, and helping all children reach, high standards, does not work.

"(3) Use of low-level tests that are not aligned with schools' curricula fails to provide adequate information about what children know and can do and encourages curricula and instruction that focus on low-level skills measured by those tests.

"(4) Resources are less effective when they serve children through such practices as pull-out programs, instead of ensuring that children have full access to effective regular school programs and receive supplemental help through extended-time activities.

"(5) The disproven theory that children must first learn basic skills before engaging in more complex tasks continues to dominate strategies for classroom instruction, resulting in emphasis on repetitive drill and practice at the expense of content-rich instruction, accelerated curricula, and effective teaching to high standards.

"(6) Intensive and sustained professional development for teachers and other school staff—focused on teaching and learning and on helping children attain high standards—is too often not provided.

"(7) Insufficient attention and resources are directed toward the effective use of technology in schools and the role it can play in professional development and improved teaching and learning.

"(8) All parents can contribute to their children's success by helping at home and becoming partners with teachers so that children can achieve high standards.

"(9) Decentralized decisionmaking is a key ingredient of systemic reform. Schools need the resources, flexibility, and responsibility to design and implement effective strategies for bringing their children to high levels of performance and should accept responsibility to do so.

"(10) Opportunities for students to achieve to high standards can be enhanced through a variety of approaches such as public school choice and charter schools.

"(11) Attention to academics alone cannot ensure that all children will reach high standards. The health and other needs of children that affect learning are frequently unmet, particularly in high-poverty schools, thereby necessitating coordination of services to better meet children's needs.

"(d) STATEMENT OF PURPOSE.—The purpose of this title is to enable schools to provide opportunities for children served to acquire the knowledge and skills contained in the rigorous State content standards and to meet the challenging State performance standards developed for all children under the Goals 2000: Educate America Act or, in their absence, under this title. This purpose shall be accomplished by—

"(1) ensuring high standards for all children and aligning the efforts of States, local educational agencies, and schools to help children served under this title to reach them;

"(2) providing children an enriched and accelerated educational program through schoolwide programs or through additional services that increase the amount and quality of instructional time so that children served under this title receive at least all the classroom instruction that other children receive;

"(3) promoting schoolwide reform and ensuring access of children—from the earliest grades—to effective instructional strategies and challenging academic content that includes intensive complex thinking and problem-solving experiences;

"(4) significantly upgrading the quality of curricula and instruction by providing staff in participating schools with substantial opportunities for intensive and sustained professional development;

"(5) coordinating services under all parts of this title with each other, with other educational services, and, to the extent feasible, with health and social service programs funded from other sources;

"(6) affording parents meaningful opportunities to participate in the education of their children at home and at school;

"(7) distributing resources, in amounts sufficient to make a difference, to areas where needs are greatest;

"(8) improving accountability, as well as teaching and learning, by using State assessment systems designed to measure how well children are achieving high State standards of performance expected of all children; and

"(9) providing greater decisionmaking authority and flexibility to schools in exchange for greater responsibility for student performance.

"SEC. 1002. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

"(1) LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCY GRANTS.—For the purpose of carrying out part A of this title, other than section 1118(e), there are authorized to be appropriated $7,000,000,000 for fiscal year 1995 and such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1996 through 1999.

"(B) For the purpose of carrying out section 1502 of this title, there are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1995 through 1999.

"PART A—MAKING HIGH-POVERTY SCHOOLS WORK

"Subpart 1—Basic Program Requirements

"SEC. 1111. STATE PLANS.

"(a) PLANS REQUIRED.—(1) Any State desiring to receive a grant under this part shall submit to the Secretary a plan, developed in consultation with local educational agencies, teachers, administrators, and parents, that—

"(A)(i) is integrated with the State's plan, either approved or being developed, under title III of the Goals 2000: Educate America Act, and satisfies the requirements of this section that are not already addressed by that State plan; and

"(ii) is integrated with other State plans, if any, under the School-to-Work Opportunities Act of 1993 and the Carl D. Perkins Vocational and Applied Technology Education Act, to the extent that these plans have not already been incorporated in the State's plan under title III of the Goals 2000: Educate America Act; or

"(B) if the State does not have an approved plan under title III of the Goals 2000: Educate America Act and is not developing such a plan—

"(i) is integrated with other State plans under this Act and other plans, including those under the School-to-Work Opportunities Act of 1993 and the Carl D. Perkins Vocational and Applied Technology Education Act, where such plans exist; and

"(ii) satisfies the requirements of this section.

"(2) The plan may be submitted as part of a consolidated application under section 9302.

"(3) A State may satisfy all or part of the requirements of this section by referencing applicable sections of its approved State plan under title III of the Goals 2000: Educate America Act.

"(b) STANDARDS AND ASSESSMENT PROVISIONS.—(1)(A) Each State plan shall demonstrate that the State has developed or adopted high-quality standards for children served under this title that will be used by the State, its local educational agencies, and its schools to carry out this Act and that these standards be as challenging and of the same high-quality as they are for all children. These standards shall include—

"(i) challenging content standards in the core academic subjects that—

"(I) specify what children served under this title are expected to know and be able to do;

"(II) contain coherent and rigorous content; and

"(III) emphasize the teaching of advanced skills;

"(ii) challenging performance standards that—

"(I) are aligned with the State's content standards;

"(II) describe two levels of high performance, 'proficient' and 'advanced', that determine how well children served under this title are mastering the material in the content standards; and

"(III) include a third benchmark below proficient, if necessary, to provide complete information about the progress of the lower-performing children toward achieving the high 'proficient' and 'advanced' performance standards.

"(B) For those core academic subjects in which a State has not adopted challenging content and performance standards, the State plan shall include a schedule for their development that includes the completion of standards in mathematics and reading/language arts by the end of the interim period as described in paragraph (7).

"(2)(A) Each State plan shall demonstrate, based on assessments described under paragraph (3), what constitutes adequate yearly progress of—

"(i) any school served under this part toward enabling children to meet the State's 'proficient' and 'advanced' performance standards; and

"(ii) any local educational agency that received funds under this part toward enabling children in schools receiving assistance under this part to meet the State's 'proficient' and 'advanced' performance standards.

"(B) Adequate yearly progress shall be defined in a manner—

"(i) that is consistent with criteria of general applicability established by the Secretary and results in continuous and substantial yearly improvement for economically disadvantaged, limited-English proficient, and all students under this title in each school and local educational agency toward the goal of all children under this title meeting the State's challenging 'advanced' performance standards; and

"(ii) links progress primarily to performance on the assessments carried out under this section while permitting progress to be established in part through the use of other outcome-based measures such as reductions in drop-out rates.

"(3) Each State plan shall demonstrate that the State has developed or adopted a set of high-quality, yearly student assessments that will be used as the primary means of determining the yearly performance of each local educational agency and school receiving assistance under this part in enabling children served under this title to meet the State's performance standards and that these assessments be challenging and of the same high-quality as they are for all children. These assessments shall—

"(A) be aligned with the State's challenging content and performance standards and provide coherent information about student attainment of such standards;

"(B) be used for purposes for which they are valid and reliable, and be consistent with relevant nationally recognized professional and technical standards of assessments;

"(C) measure the proficiency of students in the core academic subjects in which a State has adopted challenging content and performance standards and be administered at some time during—

"(i) grades 3 through 5;

"(ii) grades 6 through 9;

"(iii) grades 10 through 12.

"(D) be comprised of multiple, up-to-date measures of student performance;

"(ii) include students who have been resident in a local educational agency for a full academic year but have not attended a single school for a full year, provided that the performance of students who have attended more than one school in the local educational agency in any academic year shall be used only in determining the progress of the local educational agency; and

"(iii) include students with disabilities who shall be assessed, to the extent practicable, in a manner and form most likely to yield accurate and reliable information on what these students know and can do, including assessment accommodations and modifications necessary to make such determinations, provided that those students who are determined, through valid evaluation conducted by qualified personnel, to be so severely cognitively impaired as to permanently lack the capacity to make any educational progress, with the provision of special education and related services, in meeting the State content and performance standards may be exempted from the assessment process;

"(F) provide individual student scores; and

"(G) provide for disaggregated results within each State, local educational agency, and school by gender, by each major racial and ethnic group, by English proficiency status, and by economically disadvantaged students as compared to students who are not economically disadvantaged.

"(4) If a State has developed or adopted challenging content and performance standards and an aligned set of assessments for all students such as those developed under title III of the Goals 2000: Educate America Act, or another process, the State shall use such standards and assessments, modified, if necessary, to conform with the requirements of paragraphs (1)(A)(ii), (2), and (3).

"(5) If, after 2 years, a State does not have challenging content and performance standards that meet the requirements of paragraph (1) or after 3 years, a State does not have assessments that meet the requirements of paragraph (3), a State shall adopt a set of standards and aligned assessments such as the standards and assessments contained in other State plans that the Secretary has approved.

"(6)(A) If a State does not have assessments that meet the requirements of paragraph (3), the State may propose to use an interim set of yearly statewide assessments that will assess the performance of complex skills and challenging subject matter.

"(B) For any year during which a State is using an interim assessment system, the State shall devise a means for identifying schools and local educational agencies in need of improvement under section 1119.

"(c) OTHER PROVISIONS TO SUPPORT TEACHING AND LEARNING.—Each State plan shall also describe—

"(1)(A) the means by which the State educational agency will work with other agencies, including educational service agencies or other local consortia, and institutions to provide technical assistance to local educational agencies and schools to carry out the State educational agency's responsibilities under this part; and

"(B)(i) where educational service agencies exist, the State educational agency shall consider providing professional development and technical assistance through such agencies; and

"(ii) where educational service agencies do not exist, the State educational agency shall consider providing professional development and technical assistance through other cooperative agreements such as a consortium of local educational agencies;

"(2) the measure of poverty that local educational agencies shall use which shall include such measures as the number of children age 5 to 7 in poverty counted in the most recent census data approved by the Secretary, the number of children eligible to receive free and reduced price lunches under the National School Lunch Act, the number of children in families receiving assistance under Aid to Families With Dependent Children or the number of children eligible to receive medical assistance under the Medicaid program; or a composite of such indicators;

(B) shall not decline to approve a State's plan before offering the State an opportunity to revise its plan or application, provide technical assistance in order to assist the State to meet the requirements under subsections (b) and (c) and a hearing; and

(C) may withhold funds until determining that the plan meets the requirements of this section.

"(e) DURATION OF THE PLAN.—(1) Each State plan shall—

"(A) remain in effect for the duration of the State's participation under this part; and

"(2) If the State makes significant changes in its plan, such as the adoption of new content and performance standards, new assessments, or a new definition of adequate progress, the State shall submit this information to the Secretary for approval.

"(f) Nothing in this title shall be construed to authorize an officer or employee of the Federal Government to mandate, direct, or control a State, local educational agency, or school's specific instructional content or pupil performance standards and assessments, curriculum, or program of instruction as a condition of eligibility to receive funds under this title.

"(g) If aggregate State expenditure by the State educational agency for operation of elementary and secondary education programs is less than the State educational agency's aggregate Federal allocation for State operation of all Federal elementary and secondary education programs, then the State plan for title I must include assurances and specific provisions for State expenditures for operation of elementary and secondary education programs to equal or exceed the level of Federal expenditures for such operation by fiscal year 1999.

"SEC. 1113. ELIGIBLE SCHOOL ATTENDANCE AREAS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—(1)(A)(i) A local educational agency shall use funds received under this part only in school attendance areas with high concentrations of children from low-income families, hereafter in this section referred to as 'eligible school attendance areas'.

"(ii) For the purposes of this part—

"(I) 'school attendance area' means, in relation to a particular school, the geographical area in which the children who are normally served by such school reside; and

"(II) 'eligible school attendance area' means a school attendance area in which the percentage of children from low-income families is at least as high as the percentage of children from low-income families in the local educational agency as a whole.

"(B) If funds allocated in accordance with subsection (c) are insufficient to serve all eligible school attendance areas, a local educational agency shall—

"(i) annually rank, without regard to grade spans, its eligible school attendance areas in which the concentration of children from low-income families exceeds 75 percent from highest to lowest according to the percentage of children from low-income families; and

"(ii) serve such eligible school attendance areas in rank order.

"(C) If funds remain after serving all eligible school attendance areas under subparagraph (B), a local educational agency shall—

"(i) annually rank its remaining eligible school attendance areas from highest to lowest either by grade span or for the entire local educational agency according to the percentage of children from low-income families; and

"(ii) serve such eligible school attendance areas in rank order either within each grade-span grouping or within the local educational agency as a whole.

"(2) The local educational agency shall use as the measure of poverty, the number of children ages 5–17 in poverty counted in the most recent census data approved by the Secretary, the number of children eligible for free and reduced priced lunches under the National School Lunch Act, the number of children in families receiving assistance under Aid to Families with Dependent Children or the number of children eligible to receive medical assistance under the Medicaid program, or a composite of such indicators, with respect to all school attendance areas in the local educational agency—

"(A) to identify eligible school attendance areas;

"(B) to determine the ranking of each area; and

"(C) to determine allocations under subsection (c).

"(3) This subsection shall not apply to a local educational agency with a total enrollment of less than 1,000 children.

"(b) LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCY DISCRETION.—Notwithstanding subsection (a)(1), a local educational agency may—

"(1) designate as eligible any school attendance area or school in which at least 50 percent of the children are from low-income families;

“(2) use funds received under this part in a school that is not in an eligible school attendance area, if the percentage of children from low-income families enrolled in the school is equal to or greater than the percentage of such children in a participating school attendance area of such agency; and

“(3)(A) elect not to serve an eligible school attendance area or eligible school that has a higher percentage of children from low-income families if—

“(i) the school meets the comparability requirements of section 1120(c);

“(ii) the school is receiving supplemental funds from other State or local sources that are spent according to the requirements of section 1114 or 1115; and

“(iii) the funds expended from such other sources equal or exceed the amount that would be provided under this part.

“(B) Notwithstanding subparagraph (A), the number of children attending private elementary and secondary schools who are to receive services, and the assistance they are to receive under this part, shall be determined without regard to whether the public school attendance area in which such children reside is passed over under this paragraph.

“(c) ALLOCATIONS.—(1) A local educational agency shall allocate funds received under this part to eligible school attendance areas or eligible schools, identified under subsection (a) or (b), in rank order, on the basis of the total number of children from low-income families in each area or school.

“(2)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), the per-pupil amount of funds allocated to each school attendance area or school under paragraph (1) shall be not less than 80 percent of the per-pupil amount of funds the local educational agency received for such year under sections 1124, 1124A, and 1125.

“(B) A local educational agency may reduce the amount of funds allocated under subparagraph (A) for a school attendance area or school by the amount of any supplemental State and local funds expended in such school attendance area or school for programs that meet the requirements of section 1114 or 1115.

“(3) A local educational agency shall reserve such funds as are necessary under this part to provide services comparable to the services provided to children in schools funded under this part to serve—

“(A) For school year 1995–96—

“(i) the school serves an eligible school attendance area in which at least 65 percent of the children are from low-income families; or

“(ii) at least 65 percent of the children enrolled in the school are from such families.

“(B) For school year 1996–97 and thereafter, the percentage requirement in subparagraphs (A) (i) and (ii) shall be 50 percent.

“(2)(A) No schoolwide program school shall be required to identify particular children as eligible to participate or to provide supplemental services to them.

“(B) A schoolwide program school shall use such funds only to supplement the amount of funds that would, in the absence of funds under this part, be made available from non-Federal sources for the school, including funds needed to provide services that are required by law for children with disabilities and children with limited English proficiency.

“(3) A school may use funds received under any noncompetitive, formula-grant program administered by the Secretary, except such a program under the Individuals With Disabilities Education Act, and any discretionary program contained on a list (updated as necessary) issued by the Secretary to support a schoolwide program, notwithstanding any provision of the statute or regulations governing any such program.

“(ii) describes how the school will use resources under this part and from other sources to implement those components;

“(iii) includes a list of State and local educational agency programs and other Federal programs under paragraph (a)(3) that will be included in the schoolwide program; and

“(iv) describes how the school will provide individual student assessment results, including an interpretation of those results, to the parents of any child who participates in the assessment required by section 1111(b)(3).

“(B) Plans developed before a State has adopted standards and a set of assessments that meet the criteria in section 1111(b) (1) and (3) shall be based on an analysis of available data on the achievement of students in the school and a review of the school's instructional practices in the context of available research on effective instructional and school improvement practices.

“(C) The comprehensive plan shall be—

“(i) developed over a one-year period, unless—

“(I) the local educational agency, based on the recommendation of the school support team under subsection (c), determines that less time is needed to develop and implement the schoolwide program; or

“(II) the school is operating a schoolwide program at the time this section takes effect, in which case it may continue to operate that program, but shall develop a new plan during the first year to reflect the provisions of this section;

"(ii) the program to be conducted that incorporates the components described in paragraph (1) and how the resources provided under this part will be coordinated with other resources to enable the children served to meet the State's standards;

"(iii) how the school will review, on an ongoing basis, the progress of participating children and revise the program, if necessary, to provide additional assistance to enable such children to meet the State's challenging performance standards such as an extended school year and before- and after-school programs and opportunities, training for teachers regarding how to identify students that require additional assistance, and training for teachers regarding how to implement performance standards in the classroom; and

"(iv) if the school is eligible to operate a schoolwide program under section 1114, why it chose not to do so.

"(2) participate in general professional development and school planning activities; and

"(3) collaboratively teach with regular classroom teachers, so long as their efforts directly benefit participating children.

"SEC. 1116. PUBLIC SCHOOL CHOICE.

"(e) CAPITAL EXPENSES.—(1)(A) From the amount appropriated for this subsection under section 1002(e) for any fiscal year, each State is eligible to receive an amount that bears the same ratio to the amount so appropriated as the number of private school children who received services under this part in the State in the most recent year for which data satisfactory to the Secretary are available bears to the number of such children in all States in that same year.

"(B) The Secretary shall reallocate any amounts allocated under subparagraph (A) that are not used by a State for the purpose of this subsection to other States on the basis of their respective needs, as determined by the Secretary.

"(2)(A) Each school identified under paragraph (1) shall—

"(i) in consultation with parents, the local educational agency, and, for schoolwide programs, the school support team, revise its school plan under section 1114 or 1115 in ways that have the greatest likelihood of improving the performance of participating children in meeting the State's performance standards; and

"(ii) submit the revised plan to the local educational agency for approval.

"(B) During the first year immediately following identification under paragraph (1), the school shall implement its revised plan.

"(3) For each school identified under paragraph (1), the local educational agency shall provide technical assistance as the school develops and implements its revised plan.

"(4)(A) The local educational agency may take corrective action at any time against a school that has been identified under paragraph (1), but, during the third year following identification under paragraph (1), shall take such action against any school that still fails to make adequate progress.

"(B) Corrective actions are those listed in the local educational agency plan adopted in compliance with State law, which may include, but are not limited to, decreasing decisionmaking authority at the school level; making alternative governance arrangements such as the creation of a charter school; reconstituting the school staff; withholding funds; and authorizing students to transfer, including paying transportation costs, to other schools in the local educational agency.

"(C)(i) At any time after a school has been identified under paragraph (1), the local education agency may authorize students eligible for assistance under this title to transfer to another public school receiving funds under this title.

"(ii) During the third and subsequent years following the identification of a school under paragraph (1), the local education agency shall authorize students eligible for assistance under this title to transfer to another public school receiving funds under this title.

"(5) The State educational agency shall—

"(A) make assistance from Distinguished Educators under subsection (e) available to the schools farthest from meeting the State's standards, if requested by the school or local educational agency; and

"(B) if it determines that a local educational agency failed to carry out its responsibility under paragraphs (3) and (4), take such corrective actions that it deems appropriate.

"(6) Schools that for at least two of the three years following identification under paragraph (1) make adequate progress toward meeting the State's 'proficient' and 'advanced' performance standards no longer need to be identified for school improvement.

"(d) STATE REVIEW AND LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCY IMPROVEMENT.—(1) A State educational agency shall—

"(A) annually review the progress of each local educational agency receiving funds under this part to determine whether it is making adequate progress as defined in section 1111(b)(2)(A)(ii) toward meeting the State's performance standards; and

"(B) publicize and disseminate to teachers, parents, students, and the community the results of the State review, including disaggregated results, as required by section 1111(b)(3)(F).

"(2) In the case of a local educational agency that for three consecutive years has exceeded the State's definition of adequate progress as defined in section 1111(b)(2)(A)(ii), the State may make institutional and individual rewards of the kinds described for individual schools in subsection (b)(3).

"(3) A State educational agency shall identify for improvement any local educational agency that—

"(A) for two consecutive years, is not making adequate progress as defined in section 1111(b)(2)(A)(ii) toward meeting the State's performance standards; or

"(B) has failed to meet the criteria established by the State through its interim procedure under section 1111(b)(5)(C) for two consecutive years.

"(4) Each local educational agency identified under paragraph (3) shall, in consultation with schools, parents, and educational experts, revise its district-level plan under section 1112 in ways that have the greatest likelihood of improving the performance of its schools in meeting the State's performance standards.

"(5) For each local educational agency identified under paragraph (3), the State educational agency shall—

"(A) provide technical assistance to better enable the local educational agency to develop and implement its revised plan and work with schools needing improvement; and

"(B) make available to the districts farthest from meeting the State's standards, if requested, assistance from Distinguished Educators under subsection (e).

"(6)(A) The State educational agency may take corrective action at any time against a local educational agency that has been identified under paragraph (3), but, during the fourth year following identification under paragraph (3), shall take such action against any local educational agency that still fails to make adequate progress.

"(B) Corrective actions are those listed in the local educational agency plan adopted in compliance with State law, which may include, but are not limited to, reconstitution of district personnel; appointment by the State educational agency of a receiver or trustee to administer the affairs of the local educational agency in place of the superintendent and school board; removal of particular schools from the jurisdiction of the local educational agency and establishment of alternative arrangements for governing and supervising such schools; the abolition or restructuring of the local educational agency; and the withholding of funds.

"(C)(i) At any time after a local education agency has been identified under paragraph (3), the State may authorize students eligible for assistance under this title to transfer to another public school in another local agency receiving funds under this title.

"(ii) During the fourth and subsequent years following the identification of a local education agency under paragraph (3), the State shall authorize students eligible for assistance under this title to transfer to another public school in another local education agency receiving funds under this title.

"(7) Local educational agencies that for at least two of the three years following identification under paragraph (3) make adequate progress toward meeting the State's standards no longer need to be identified for district improvement.

"(e) DISTINGUISHED EDUCATORS.—(1) In order to provide assistance to schools and local educational agencies identified as needing improvement under subsection (c) or (d), each State, using funds available under section 1002(f), shall establish a corps of Distinguished Educators.

"(2) When possible, these Distinguished Educators shall be chosen from schools served under this part that have been especially successful in enabling children to meet or make outstanding progress toward meeting the State's performance standards, such as those schools described in subsection (b).

"(3) Distinguished Educators shall provide, upon request, intensive and sustained assistance to the schools and districts farthest from meeting the State's standards as they revise and implement their plans.

"(4) If the State has devised an alternative approach to providing such intensive and sustained assistance to schools and districts farthest from meeting the State's standards, this approach shall meet the requirements of this subsection subject to the approval of the Secretary as part of the State plan.

"(f) STATE ALLOCATIONS FOR SCHOOL IMPROVEMENT.—From the amount appropriated under section 1002(f) for any fiscal year, each State shall be eligible to receive an amount that bears the same ratio to the amount appropriated as the amount allocated to the State under sections 1123 and 1124 bears to the total amount allocated to all States under those sections, except that each State shall receive at least $180,000, or $30,000 in the case of Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Northern Marianas, and Palau (until the Compact of Free Association goes into effect).

"SEC. 1120. FISCAL REQUIREMENTS.

"(a) MAINTENANCE OF EFFORT.—A local educational agency may receive funds under this part for any fiscal year only if the State educational agency finds that the local educational agency has maintained its fiscal effort in accordance with section 9501 of this Act, including such effort for professional development activities.

"(b) FEDERAL FUNDS TO SUPPLEMENT, NOT SUPPLANT, NON-FEDERAL FUNDS.—(1)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), a State or local educational agency shall use funds received under this part only to supplement the amount of funds that would, in the absence of such Federal funds, be made available from non-Federal sources for the education of pupils participating in programs assisted under this part, and not to supplant such funds.

"(B) For the purpose of complying with subparagraph (A), a State or local educational agency may exclude supplemental State and local funds expended in any eligible school attendance area or school for programs that meet the requirements of section 1114 or 1115.

"(2) No local educational agency shall be required to provide services under this part through a particular instructional method or in a particular instructional setting in order to demonstrate its compliance with paragraph (1).

"(c) COMPARABILITY OF SERVICES.—(1)(A) Except as provided in paragraphs (4) and (5), a local educational agency may receive funds under this part only if State and local funds will be used in schools served under this part to provide services that, taken as a whole, are at least comparable to services in schools that are not receiving funds under this part.

"(B) If the local educational agency is serving all of its schools under this part, such agency may receive funds under this part only if it will use State and local funds to provide services that, taken as a whole, are substantially comparable in each school.

"(C) A local educational agency may meet the requirements of subparagraphs (A) and (B) on a grade-span by grade-span basis or a school-by-school basis.

"(2)(A) To meet the requirements of paragraph (1), a local educational agency shall demonstrate that—

"(i) expenditures per pupil from State and local funds in each school served under this part are equal to or greater than the average expenditures per pupil in schools not receiving services under this part; or

"(ii) it has adopted a districtwide salary schedule.

"(B) A local educational agency need not include unpredictable changes in student enrollment or personnel assignments that occur after the beginning of a school year in determining comparability of services under this subsection.

"(3) Each local educational agency shall—

"(A) develop procedures for compliance with this subsection; and

"(B) maintain records that are updated biennially documenting its compliance.

"(4) This subsection shall not apply to a local educational agency that does not have more than one building for each grade span.

"(5) For the purpose of determining compliance with paragraph (1), a local educational agency may exclude State and local funds expended for—

"(A) bilingual education for children of limited English proficiency; and

"Subpart 2—Allocations

"SEC. 1122. GRANTS FOR THE OUTLYING AREAS AND THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

"(a) RESERVATION OF FUNDS.—From the amount appropriated for payments to States for any fiscal year under section 1002(a), the Secretary shall reserve a total of 1 percent to provide assistance to—

"(1) the outlying areas on the basis of their respective need for such assistance according to such criteria as the Secretary determines will best carry out the purpose of this part; and

"(2) the Secretary of the Interior in the amount necessary to make payments pursuant to subsection (b).

"(b) ALLOTMENT TO THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.—

"(1) The amount allotted for payments to the Secretary of the Interior under subsection (a)(2) for any fiscal year shall be, as determined pursuant to criteria established by the Secretary, the amount necessary to meet the special educational needs of—

"(A) Indian children on reservations served by elementary and secondary schools for Indian children operated or supported by the Department of the Interior; and

"(B) out-of-State Indian children in elementary and secondary schools in local educational agencies under special contracts with the Department of the Interior.

"(2) From the amount allotted for payments to the Secretary of the Interior under subsection (a)(2), the Secretary of the Interior shall make payments to local educational agencies, upon such terms as the Secretary of Education determines will best carry out the purposes of this part, with respect to out-of-State Indian children described in paragraph (1). The amount of such payment may not exceed, for each such child, the greater of—

"(A) 40 percent of the average per-pupil expenditure in the State in which the agency is located; or

"(B) 48 percent of such expenditure in the United States.

"SEC. 1123. ALLOCATIONS TO STATES.

"(a) GENERAL.—For each fiscal year, an amount of the appropriations for this part equal to the appropriation for fiscal year 1994 for part A of chapter 1, title I, Elementary and Secondary Education Act, shall be allocated in accordance with sections 1124 and 1124A. Any additional appropriations for this part for any fiscal year, after application of the preceding sentence, shall be allocated in accordance with section 1125.

"(b) ADJUSTMENTS WHERE NECESSITATED BY APPROPRIATIONS.—

"(1) If the sums available under this part for any fiscal year are insufficient to pay the full amounts that all local educational agencies in States are eligible to receive under sections 1124, 1124A, and 1125 for such year, the Secretary shall ratably reduce the allocations to such local educational agencies, subject to subsections (c) and (d) of this section.

"(2) If additional funds become available for making payments under sections 1124, 1124A, and 1125 for such fiscal year, allocations that were reduced under paragraph (1) shall be increased on the same basis as they were reduced.

"(c) HOLD-HARMLESS AMOUNTS.—Notwithstanding subsection (b), the total amount made available to each local educational agency under each of sections 1124 and 1125 for any fiscal year shall be at least 85 percent of the total amount such local educational agency was allocated under such sections (or, for fiscal year 1995, their predecessor authorities) for the preceding fiscal year.

"(d) DEFINITION.—For the purpose of this section and sections 1124 and 1125, the term State means each of the 50 States, the District of Columbia, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

"(a) AMOUNT OF GRANTS.—

"(1) GRANTS FOR LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES AND PUERTO RICO.—

"(A) The grant which a local educational agency in a State is eligible to receive under this subpart for a fiscal year shall (except as provided in section 1126), be determined by multiplying the number of children counted under subsection (c) by 40 percent of the amount determined under the next sentence. The amount determined under this sentence shall be the average per pupil expenditure in the State except that (i) if the average per pupil expenditure in the State is less than 80 percent of the average per pupil expenditure in the United States, such amount shall be 80 percent of the average per pupil expenditure in the United States, or (ii) if the average per pupil expenditure in the State is more than 120 percent of the average per pupil expenditure in the United States, such amount shall be 120 percent of the average per pupil expenditure in the United States. For each local educational agency serving an area with a total population of at least 20,000 persons, the grant under this section shall be the amount determined by the Secretary. For local educational agencies serving areas with total population of fewer than 20,000 persons, the State education agency may either (I) distribute to such local educational agencies grants under this section equal to the amounts determined by the Secretary; or (II) use an alternative method, approved by the Secretary, to distribute the share of the State's total grants under this section that is based on local educational agencies with total populations of fewer than 20,000 persons. Such an alternative method of distributing grants under this section among a State's local educational agencies serving areas with total populations of fewer than 20,000 persons shall be based upon population data that the State education agency determines best reflect the current distribution of children in poor families among the State's local educational agencies serving areas with total populations of fewer than 20,000 persons. If a local educational agency serving an area with total population of less than 20,000 persons is dissatisfied with the determination of its grant by the State education agency, then it may appeal this determination to the Secretary. The Secretary must respond to this appeal within 45 days of receipt. The Secretary shall consult with the Secretary of Commerce regarding whether available data on population for local educational agencies serving areas with total populations of fewer than 20,000 persons are sufficiently reliable to be used to determine final grants to such areas.

"(B) If, and only if, there are portions of any of the States for which the Department of Commerce has not prepared data on the number of children, aged 5–17, from families below the poverty level for local educational agencies, then the Secretary shall use such data compiled for counties in those portions of the States, treating the counties as if they were local educational agencies. In such cases, subject to section 1126, the grant for any local educational agency in such an area of a State shall be determined on the basis of the aggregate amount of such grants for all such agencies in the county or counties in which the school district of the particular agency is located, which aggregate amount shall be equal to the aggregate amount determined under subparagraph (A) for such county or counties, and shall be allocated among those agencies upon such equitable basis as may be determined by the State educational agency in accordance with basic criteria prescribed by the Secretary.

"(C) For each fiscal year, the Secretary shall determine the percentage which the average per pupil expenditure in the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico is of the lowest average per pupil expenditure of any of the 50 States. The grant which the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico shall be eligible to receive under this subpart for a fiscal year shall be the amount arrived at by multiplying the number of children counted under subsection (c) for the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico by the product of—

"(i) the percentage determined under the preceding sentence; and

"(ii) 32 percent of the average per pupil expenditure in the United States.

"(2) DEFINITION.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'State' does not include Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Northern Mariana Islands, and Palau.

"(b) MINIMUM NUMBER OF CHILDREN TO QUALIFY.—A local educational agency shall be eligible for a basic grant for a fiscal year under this subpart only if the number of children counted under subsection (c) in the school district of such local educational agency is at least 10.

"(c) CHILDREN TO BE COUNTED.—

"(1) CATEGORIES OF CHILDREN.—The number of children to be counted for purposes of this section is the aggregate of—

"(A) the number of children aged 5 to 17, inclusive, in the school district of the local educational agency from families below the poverty level as determined under paragraph (2)(A),

"(B) the number of children aged 5 to 17, inclusive, in the school district of such agency from families above the poverty level as determined under paragraph (2)(B), and

"(C) the number of children aged 5 to 17, inclusive, in the school district of such agency in institutions for neglected and delinquent children (other than such institutions operated by the United States) or attending community day programs for such children, but not counted pursuant to subpart 3 of part D for the purposes of a grant to a State agency, or being supported in foster homes with public funds.

"(2) DETERMINATION OF NUMBER OF CHILDREN.—

"(A) For the purposes of this section, the Secretary shall determine the number of children aged 5 to 17, inclusive, from families below the poverty level on the basis of the most recent satisfactory data available from the Department of Commerce for local educational agencies (as produced and published under section 181a of title 13, United States Code). If, and only if, there are portions of any of the States for which the Department of Commerce has not prepared data on the number of children, aged 5–17, from families below the poverty level for local educational agencies, then the Secretary shall use such data compiled for counties in those portions of the States, treating the counties as if they were local educational agencies. The District of Columbia and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico shall be treated as individual local educational agencies. If a local educational agency contains two or more counties in their entirety, then each county will be treated as if it were a separate local educational agency for purposes of calculating grants under this part. The total of grants for such counties shall be allocated to such a local educational agency, which shall distribute to schools in each county within it a share of the local educational agency's total grant that is no less than the county's share of the population counts used to calculate the local educational agency's grant. If the Department of Commerce has updated data on the number of children, aged 5–17, from families below the poverty level for local educational agencies, then the Secretary shall use the updated data. In determining the families which are below the poverty level, the Secretary shall utilize the criteria of poverty used by the Bureau of the Census in compiling the most recent decennial census, in such form as those criteria have been updated by increases in the Consumer Price Index for all urban consumers, published by the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

"(B) For purposes of this section, the Secretary shall determine the number of children aged 5 to 17, inclusive, from families above the poverty level on the basis of the number of such children from families receiving an annual income, in excess of the current criteria of poverty, from payments under the program of aid to families with dependent children under a State plan approved under title IV of the Social Security Act; and in making such determinations the Secretary shall utilize the criteria of poverty used by the Bureau of the Census in compiling the most recent decennial census for a family of 4 in such form as those criteria have been updated by increases in the Consumer Price Index for all urban consumers, published by the Bureau of Labor Statistics. The Secretary shall determine the number of such children and the number of children of such ages living in institutions for neglected or delinquent children, or being supported in foster homes with public funds, on the basis of the caseload data for the month of October of the preceding fiscal year (using, in the case of children described in the preceding sentence, the criteria of poverty and the form of such criteria required by such sentence which were determined for the calendar year preceding such month of October) or, to the extent that such data are not available to the Secretary before January of the calendar year in which the Secretary's determination is made, then on the basis of the most recent reliable data available to the Secretary at the time of such determination. The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall collect and transmit the information required by this subparagraph to the Secretary not later than January 1 of each year.

"(C) When requested by the Secretary, the Secretary of Commerce shall make a special updated estimate of the number of children of such ages who are from families below the poverty level (as determined under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph) in each school district, and the Secretary is authorized to pay (either in advance or by way of reimbursement) the Secretary of Commerce the cost of making this special estimate. The Secretary of Commerce shall give consideration to any request of the chief executive of a State for the collection of additional census information. For purposes of this section, the Secretary shall consider all children who are in correctional institutions to be living in institutions for delinquent children.

"(d) STATE MINIMUM.—

"(1) The aggregate amount allotted for all local educational agencies within a State may not be less than one-quarter of 1 percent of the total amount available for such fiscal year under this section.

"(2)(A) No State shall, by reason of the application of the provisions of paragraph (1) of this subsection, be allotted more than—

"(i) 150 percent of the amount that the State received in the fiscal year preceding the fiscal year for which the determination is made, or

"(ii) the amount calculated under subparagraph (B), whichever is less.

"(B) For the purpose of subparagraph (A)(ii), the amount for each State equals—

"(i) the number of children in such State counted under subsection (c) in the fiscal year specified in subparagraph (A), multiplied by "(ii) 150 percent of the national average per pupil payment made with funds available under this section for that year.

"SEC. 1124A. CONCENTRATION GRANTS TO LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES.

"(a) ELIGIBILITY FOR AND AMOUNT OF GRANTS.—

"(1)(A) Except as otherwise provided in this paragraph, each local educational agency, in a State other than Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Northern Mariana Islands, and Palau, which is eligible for a grant under this part for any fiscal year shall be entitled to an additional grant under this section for that fiscal year if—

"(i) the number of children counted under section 1124(c) of this part in the local educational agency for the preceding fiscal year exceeds 6,500, or

"(ii) the number of children counted under section 1124(c) exceeds 15 percent of the total number of children aged five to seventeen, inclusive, in the local educational agency in that fiscal year.

"(B) Except as provided in subparagraph (C), no State described in subparagraph (A) shall receive less than—

"(i) one-quarter of 1 percent of the sums appropriated under paragraph (6) of this section for such fiscal year; or

"(ii) $250,000, whichever is higher.

"(C) No State shall, by reason of the application of the provisions of subparagraph (B)(i) of this paragraph, be allotted more than—

"(i) 150 percent of the amount that the State received in the fiscal year preceding the fiscal year for which the determination is made, or

"(ii) the amount calculated under subparagraph (D), whichever is less.

"(D) For the purpose of subparagraph (C), the amount for each State equals—

"(i) the number of children in such State counted for purposes of this section in the fiscal year specified in subparagraph (B), multiplied by

"(ii) 150 percent of the national average per pupil payment made with funds available under this section for that year.

"(2) For each local educational agency eligible to receive an additional grant under this section for any fiscal year the Secretary shall determine the product of—

"(A) the greater of—

"(i) the number of children in excess of 6,500 counted under section 1124(c) for the preceding fiscal year, in a local educational agency which qualifies on the basis of subparagraph (A)(i) of paragraph (1); or

"(ii) the number of children counted under section 1124(c) for the preceding fiscal year in a local educational agency which qualifies on the basis of subparagraph (A)(ii) of paragraph (1); and

"(B) the quotient resulting from the division of the amount determined for those agencies under section 1124(a)(1) for the fiscal year for which the determination is being made divided by the total number of children counted under section 1124(c) for that agency for the preceding fiscal year.

"(3) The amount of the additional grant to which an eligible local educational agency is entitled under this section for any fiscal year shall be an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount reserved under paragraph (6) for that fiscal year as the product determined under paragraph (2) for such local educational agency for that fiscal year bears to the sum of such products for all local educational agencies in the United States for that fiscal year.

"(4) For the purposes of this section, the Secretary shall determine the number of children counted under section 1124(c) for any local educational agency, and the total number of children aged five to seventeen, inclusive, in local educational agencies, on the basis of the most recent satisfactory data available at the time the payment for such local educational agency is determined under section 1124.

"(5)(A) For each local educational agency serving an area with a total population of at least 20,000 persons, the grant under this section shall be the amount determined by the Secretary. For local educational agencies serving areas with total populations of fewer than 20,000 persons, the State education agency may either (i) distribute to such local educational agencies grants under this section equal to the amounts determined by the Secretary; or (ii) use an alternative method, approved by the Secretary, to distribute the share of the State's total grants under this section that is based on local educational agencies with total populations of fewer than 20,000 persons. Such an alternative method of distributing grants under this section among a State's local educational agencies serving areas with total populations of fewer than 20,000 persons shall be based upon population data that the State education agency determines best reflects the current distribution of children in poor families among the State's local educational agencies serving areas with total populations of fewer than 20,000 persons and meeting the eligibility criteria of paragraph (1)(A). If a local educational agency serving an area with total population of less than 20,000 persons is dissatisfied with the determination of its grant by the State education agency, then it may appeal this determination to the Secretary. The Secretary must respond to this appeal within 45 days of receipt. The Secretary shall consult with the Secretary of Commerce regarding whether available data on population for local educational agencies serving areas with total populations of fewer than 20,000 persons are sufficiently reliable to be used to determine final grants to such areas meeting the eligibility criteria of paragraph (1)(A).

"(B) If, and only if, there are portions of any of the States for which the Department of Commerce has not prepared data on the number of children, aged 5–17, from families below the poverty level for local educational agencies, then the Secretary shall use such data compiled for counties in those portions of the States, treating the counties as if they were local educational agencies. In such cases, subject to section 1126, the grant for any local educational agency in such an area of a State shall be determined on the basis of the aggregate amount of such grants for all such agencies in the county or counties in which the school district of the particular agency is located, which aggregate amount shall be equal to the aggregate amount determined under subparagraph (A) for such county or counties, and shall be allocated among those agencies upon such equitable basis as may be determined by the State educational agency in accordance with the basic criteria prescribed by the Secretary.

"(b) RESERVATION OF FUNDS.—Of the total amount of funds available for sections 1124 and 1124A, 10 percent of the amount appropriated for that fiscal year shall be available to carry out this section.

"(c) RATABLE REDUCTION RULE.—If the sums available under subsection (b) for any fiscal year for making payments under this section are not sufficient to pay in full the total amounts which all States are entitled to receive under subsection (a) for such fiscal year, the maximum amounts which all States are entitled to receive under subsection (a) for such fiscal year shall be ratably reduced. In case additional funds become available for making such payments for any fiscal year during which the preceding sentence is applicable, such reduced amounts shall be increased on the same basis as they were reduced.

"SEC. 1125. TARGETED GRANTS TO LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES.

"(a) ELIGIBILITY OF LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES.—A local educational agency in a State is eligible to receive a targeted grant under this section for any fiscal year if the number of children in the local educational agency under subsection 1124(c), before application of the weighting factor, is at least 10.

"(b) GRANTS FOR LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES, THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, AND PUERTO RICO.—(1) The amount of the grant that a local educational agency in a State or that the District of Columbia is eligible to receive under this section for any fiscal year shall be the product of—

"(A) the number of children counted under subsection (c); and

"(B) the amount in the second sentence of subparagraph 1124(a)(1)(A).

"(2) For each fiscal year, the amount of the grant for which the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico is eligible under this section shall be equal to the number of children counted under subsection (c) for Puerto Rico, multiplied by the amount determined in subparagraph 1124(a)(1)(C).

"(1) CATEGORIES OF CHILDREN.—The number of children to be counted for purposes of this section shall be the number counted in subsection 1124(c) multiplied by the weighting factor for the local educational agency. The weighting factor shall be established on the basis of the percentage that the number of children counted under section 1124(c) represents of the total population aged 5–17 years in the local educational agency or the number of such children. Weighted pupil counts will be calculated based upon both percentage and number and the larger of the two counts will be used in calculating grants for each local educational agency. Weighting factors shall be assigned according to the following scale: if the percentage is greater than 0 but less than 14.265, the weighting factor shall be 1.00 for all children counted in section 1124(c); if the percentage is greater than 14.265 but less than 21.553, the weighting factor shall be 1.00 for a number of children counted in section 1124(c) equal to 14.265 percent of the total school age population and 1.50 for children counted under section 1124(c) in excess of 14.265 percent of the total school age population; if the percentage is greater than 21.553 percent but less than 29.223 percent, then the weighting factor shall be 1.00 for a number of children counted in section 1124(c) equal to 14.265 percent of the total school age population, 1.50 for a number of children counted under section 1124(c) equal to 7.288 percent of the total school age population, and 2.00 for children counted under section 1124(c) in excess of 21.553 percent of the total school age population; if the percentage is greater than 29.223 percent but less than 36.538 percent, then the weighting factor shall be 1.00 for a number of children counted in section 1124(c) equal to 14.265 percent of the total school age population, 1.50 for a number of children counted under section 1124(c) equal to 7.288 percent of the total school age population, 2.00 for a number of children counted under section 1124(c) equal to 7.67 percent of the total school age population, and 2.50 for children counted under section 1124(c) in excess of 29.223 percent of the total school age population; and if the percentage is greater than 36.538, then the weighting factor shall be 1.00 for a number of children counted in section 1124(c) equal to 14.265 percent of the total school age population, 1.50 for a number of children counted under section 1124(c) equal to 7.288 percent of the total school age population, 2.00 for a number of children counted under section 1124(c) equal to 7.67 percent of the total school age population, 2.50 for a number of children counted in section 1124(c) equal to 7.315 percent of the total school age population, and 3.00 for children counted in section 1124(c) in excess of 36.538 percent of the total school age population. Separately, if the number of children counted under section 1124(c) is greater than 0 but less than 575, the weighting factor shall be 1.00 for all children counted in section 1124(c); if the number is greater than 575 but less than 1,870, the weighting factor shall be 1.00 for a number of children counted in section 1124(c) equal to 575, and 1.50 for children counted under section 1124(c) in excess of 575; if the number is greater than 1,870 but less than 6,910, then the weighting factor shall be 1.00 for a number of children counted in section 1124(c) equal to 575, 1.50 for a number of children counted under section 1124(c) equal to 1,295, and 2.00 for children counted under section 1124(c) in excess of 1,870; if the number is greater than 6,910 but less than 42,000 then the weighting factor shall be 1.00 for a number of children counted in section 1124(c) equal to 575, 1.50 for a number of children counted under section 1124(c) equal to 1,295, 2.00 for a number of children counted under section 1124(c) equal to 5,040, and 2.50 for children counted under section 1124(c) in excess of 6,910; and if the number is greater than 42,000, then the weighting factor shall be 1.00 for a number of children counted in section 1124(c) equal to 575, 1.50 for a number of children counted under section 1124(c) equal to 1,295, 2.00 for a number of children counted under section 1124(c) equal to 5,040, 2.50 for a number of children counted in section 1124(c) equal to 35,090 and 3.00 for children counted in section 1124(c) in excess of 42,000. For the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the weighting factor shall be no greater than 1.62.

"(d) Local Educational Agency Allocations.—For each local educational agency serving an area with a total population of at least 20,000 persons, the grant under this section shall be the amount determined by the Secretary. For local educational agencies serving areas with total populations of fewer than 20,000 persons, the State education agency may either (1) distribute to such local educational agencies grants under this section equal to the amounts determined by the Secretary; or (2) use an alternative method, approved by the Secretary, to distribute the share of the State's total grants under this section that is based on local educational agencies with total populations of fewer than 20,000 persons. Such an alternative method of distributing grants under this section among a State's local educational agencies serving areas with total populations of fewer than 20,000 persons shall be based upon population data that the State education agency determines best reflects the current distribution of children in poor families among the State's local educational agencies serving areas with total populations of fewer than 20,000 persons. If a local educational agency serving an area with total populations of less than 20,000 persons is dissatisfied with the determination of its grant by the State education agency, then it may appeal this determination to the Secretary. The Secretary must respond to this appeal within 45 days of receipt. If, and only if, there are portions of any of the States for which the Department of Commerce has not prepared data on the number of children, aged 5-17, from families below the poverty level for local educational agencies, then the Secretary shall use such data compiled for counties in those portions of the States, treating the counties as if they were local educational agencies. The Secretary shall consult with the Secretary of Commerce regarding whether available data on population for local educational agencies serving areas with total populations of fewer than 20,000 persons are sufficiently reliable to be used to determine final grants to such areas.

"(d) State Minimum.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, from the total amount available for any fiscal year to carry out this section, each State shall be allotted at least the lesser of—

"(1) one quarter of one percent of such amount;

"(2) 150 percent of the national average grant under this section per child described in section 1124(c), without application of a weighting factor, multiplied by the State's total number of children described in section 1124(c), without application of a weighting factor.

"SEC. 1126. SPECIAL ALLOCATION PROCEDURES.

"(a) Allocations for Neglected or Delinquent Children.—(1) If a State educational agency determines that a local educational agency in the State is unable or unwilling to provide for the special educational needs of children who are living in institutions for neglected or delinquent children as described in subparagraph 1124(c)(1)(C), the State educational agency shall, if it assumes responsibility for the special educational needs of such children, receive the portion of such local educational agency's allocation under sections 1124, 1124A, and 1125 that is attributable to such children.

"(2) If the State educational agency does not assume such responsibility, any other State or local public agency that does assume such responsibility shall receive that portion of the local educational agency's allocation.

"(b) Allocations Among Local Educational Agencies.—The State educational agency may allocate the amounts of grants under sections 1124, 1124A, and 1125 between and among the affected local educational agencies when—

"(1) two or more local educational agencies serve, in whole or in part, the same geographical area; or

"(2) a local educational agency provides free public education for children who reside in the school district of another local educational agency.

"(c) Reallocation.—If a State educational agency determines that the amount of a grant a local educational agency would receive under sections 1124, 1124A, and 1125 is more than such local agency will use, the State educational agency shall make the excess amount available to other local educational agencies in the State that need additional funds in accordance with criteria established by the State educational agency.

"SEC. 1127. CARRYOVER AND WAIVER.

"(a) Limitation on Carryover.—Notwithstanding section 412 of the General Education Provisions Act or any other provision of law, not more than 15 percent of the funds allocated to a local educational agency for any fiscal year under this subpart (but not including funds received through any reallocation under this subpart) may remain available for obligation by such agency for one additional fiscal year.

"(b) Waiver.—A State educational agency may, once every three years, waive the percentage limitation in subsection (a) if—

"(1) the agency determines that the request of a local educational agency is reasonable and necessary; or

"(2) supplemental appropriations for this subpart become available.

"(c) Exclusion.—The percentage limitation under subsection (a) shall not apply to any local educational agency that receives less than $50,000 under this subpart for any fiscal year.

"TITLE II—IMPROVING TEACHING AND LEARNING

"SEC. 2101. FINDINGS.

"The Congress finds that—

"(2) a crucial component of the strategy for achieving these goals is ensuring, through sustained and intensive high-quality professional development, and through the development and adoption of high quality curriculum, that all teachers are capable of providing challenging learning experiences in the core academic subjects for their students;

"(3) decisionmaking as to what activities a State or local educational agency should undertake to improve teaching and learning are best made by individuals in the schools closest to the classroom and most knowledgeable about the needs of schools and students;

"(4) the potential positive impact of high-quality professional development is underscored by recent research findings that—

"(A) professional development must be focused on teaching and learning in order to change the opportunities of all students to achieve higher standards; and

"(B) effective professional development focuses on discipline-based knowledge and subject-specific pedagogical skills, involves teams of teachers and administrators in a school and, through professional networks of teachers and administrators, is interactive and collaborative, motivates by its intrinsic content and relationship to practice, builds on experience and learning-by-doing, and becomes incorporated into the everyday life of the school;

"(5) engaging teachers in the development of high quality curricula is a powerful professional development activity that improves teaching and learning;

"(6) special attention must be given in professional development activities to ensure that education professionals are knowledgeable of, and make use of, strategies for serving populations that historically have lacked access to equal opportunities for advanced learning and career advancement;

"(7) States and local educational agencies also need to engage teachers in the development of high quality curricula that are aligned with State or local content and performance standards in order to improve teaching and learning and ensure that students achieve the State standards;

"(8) professional development is often a victim of budget reductions in fiscally difficult times and curricula development is almost nonexistent in many State and local school systems; and

"(9) the Federal Government has a vital role in helping States and local educational agencies to make sustained and intensive high-quality professional development in the core academic subjects become an integral part of the elementary and secondary education system and in providing assistance to such agencies to engage teachers in the development of high quality curricula that are aligned with State or local content and performance standards.

"SEC. 2102. PURPOSES.

"The purposes of this part are to provide assistance to States and local educational agencies and to institutions of higher education with teacher education programs so that such agencies can determine how best to improve the teaching and learning of all students through—

"(A) is tied to challenging State and local curriculum content and student performance standards;

"(B) reflects recent research on teaching and learning;

"TITLE IV—SAFE AND DRUG-FREE SCHOOLS AND COMMUNITIES

"SEC. 4001. SHORT TITLE.

"This title may be cited as the 'Safe and Drug-Free Schools and Communities Act of 1994'.

"SEC. 4002. FINDINGS.

"The Congress finds as follows:

"(1) National Education Goal Six provides that by the year 2000, all schools in America will be free of drugs and violence and offer a disciplined environment that is conducive to learning.

"(2) The widespread illegal use of alcohol and other drugs among the Nation's secondary school students, and increasingly by students in elementary schools as well, constitutes a grave threat to their physical and mental well-being, and significantly impedes the learning process. For example, data show that students who drink tend to receive lower grades and are more likely to miss school because of illness than students who do not drink.

"(3) Our Nation's schools and communities are increasingly plagued by violence and crime. Approximately three million thefts and violent crimes occur in or near our Nation's schools every year, the equivalent of more than 16,000 incidents per school day. Approximately one of every five high school students now carries a firearm, knife, or club on a regular basis.

"(4) The tragic consequences of violence and the illegal use of alcohol and drugs by students are felt not only by students and their families, but by their communities and the Nation, which can ill afford to lose their skills, talents, and vitality.

"(5) While use of illegal drugs is a serious problem among a minority of teenagers, alcohol use is far more widespread. The proportion of high school students using alcohol, though lower than a decade ago, remains unacceptably high. By the 8th grade, 70 percent of youth report having tried alcohol and by the 12th grade, about 88 percent have used alcohol. Alcohol use by young people can and does have adverse consequences for users, their families, communities, schools, and colleges.

"(6) Drug and violence prevention programs are essential components of a comprehensive strategy to promote school safety and to reduce the demand for and use of drugs throughout the Nation. "TITLE V—MAGNET SCHOOLS ASSISTANCE

"PART A—PROMOTING EQUITY

"SEC. 5101. FINDINGS.

"The Congress finds that—

"(1) magnet schools are a significant part of our Nation's effort to achieve voluntary desegregation in its schools;

"(2) the use of magnet schools has increased dramatically since enactment of the magnet program, with approximately 1.4 million students nationwide now attending such schools, of which more than 60 percent of the students are nonwhite;

"(3) magnet schools offer a wide range of distinctive programs that have served as models for school improvement efforts;

"(4) in administering this program, the Federal Government has learned that—

"(A) where magnet programs are implemented for only a portion of a school's student body, special efforts must be made to discourage the isolation of magnet students from other students in the school;

"(B) local educational agencies can maximize their effectiveness in achieving the purposes of this program if they have more flexibility to serve students attending a school who are not enrolled in the magnet school program;

"(C) local educational agencies must be creative in designing magnet schools for students at all academic levels, so that school districts do not skim off only the highest achieving students to attend the magnet schools;

"(D) local educational agencies must seek to enable participation in magnet school programs by students who reside in the neighborhoods where the programs are placed; and

"(E) in order to ensure that magnet schools are sustained after Federal funding ends, the Federal Government must assist local educational agencies to improve their capacity to continue to operate magnet schools at a high level of performance;

"(5) it is in the best interest of the Federal Government to—

"(A) continue its support of local educational agencies implementing court-ordered desegregation plans and local educational agencies seeking to foster meaningful interaction among students of different racial and ethnic backgrounds beginning at the earliest stage of their education;

"(B) ensure that all students have equitable access to quality education that will prepare them to function well in a culturally diverse, technologically-oriented, and highly competitive global community; and

"(C) maximize the ability of local educational agencies to plan, develop, implement and continue new and innovative programs in magnet schools that contribute to State and local systemic reform.

"SEC. 5102. STATEMENT OF PURPOSE.

"(1) the elimination, reduction, or prevention of minority group isolation in elementary and secondary schools with substantial proportions of minority students;

"(2) the development and implementation of magnet school projects that will assist local educational agencies in achieving systemic reforms and providing all students the opportunity to meet challenging State performance standards;

"(3) the development and design of innovative educational methods and practices; and

"(4) courses of instruction within magnet schools that will substantially strengthen the knowledge of academic subjects and the grasp of tangible and marketable vocational skills of students attending such schools.

"SEC. 5103. PROGRAM AUTHORIZED.

"(7) acquisition of equipment, but only if such acquisition is essential to meet the purpose of this part.

"(c) SCHOOLWIDE PROGRAMS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this part, a local educational agency may use funds it receives under this part to support a schoolwide program under section 1114 of title I of this Act, in accordance with such section, if the Secretary determines that the local educational agency has made adequate provision for the participation of Indian children in such project and the involvement of Indian parents in the formulation of such project.

"SEC. 6106. STUDENT ELIGIBILITY FORMS.

"(a) The Secretary shall require that each application for a grant under this subpart for each fiscal year be supported by a form, maintained in the files of the applicant, for each eligible Indian child for whom the local educational agency is providing free public education that sets forth information establishing the status of the child as an eligible Indian child.

"(b) The Secretary shall request on the form required under subsection (a) at least the following information:

"(1) either—

"(A) the name of the tribe, band, or other organized group of Indians with which the child claims membership, along with the enrollment number establishing membership (if readily available), and the name and address of the organization which has updated and accurate membership data for such tribe, band, or other organized group of Indians, or

"(B) if the child is not a member of a tribe, band, or other organized group of Indians, the name, the enrollment number (if readily available), and the organization (and address thereof) responsible for maintaining updated and accurate membership rolls of any of the child's parents or grandparents, from whom the child claims eligibility;

"(1) the child's name;

"(2) the name of the tribe, band, or other organized group of Indians; and

"(3) the parent's dated signature.

The failure of an applicant to furnish any other information listed in subsection (b) with respect to any child shall have no bearing on the determination of whether the child is an eligible Indian child.

"(d) The forms and the standards of proof (including the standard of good faith compliance) that were in use during the 1985–1986 academic year to establish a child's eligibility for entitlement under the Indian Elementary and Secondary School Assistance Act shall be the only forms and standards of proof used to establish such eligibility and to meet the requirements of subsection (a).

"(e) For purposes of determining whether a child is an eligible Indian child, the membership of the child, or any parent or grandparent of the child, in a tribe, band, or other organized group of Indians may be established by proof other than an enrollment number, even if enrollment numbers for members of such tribe, band, or groups are available. Nothing in subsection (b) may be construed as requiring the furnishing of enrollment numbers.

"(B) For purposes of an audit conducted by the Federal Government with respect to funds provided under this part, all procedures, practices, and policies that are established by—

"(i) the Office of Indian Education of the Department of Education, or

"(ii) a grantee under this subpart who, in establishing such procedures, practices, and policies, was acting under the direction of any employee of such Office that is authorized by the Director of such Office to provide such direction, shall, with respect to the period beginning on the date of the establishment of such procedures, practices, and policies, and ending on the date (if any) on which the Director of such Office revokes authorization for such procedures, practices, and policies, be considered appropriate and acceptable procedures, practices, and policies which are in conformity with Federal law.

"(C) A local educational agency may not be held liable to the United States, or be otherwise penalized, by reason of the findings of an audit that relate to the date of completion, or the date of submission, of any forms used to establish, before April 28, 1988, a child's eligibility for entitlement under the Indian Elementary and Secondary School Assistance Act.

"(2) Any local educational agency that provides false information in the application for a grant under this subpart shall be ineligible to apply for any other grants under this part and shall be liable to the United States for any funds provided under this part that have not been expended.

"(3) Any student who provides false information on the form required under subsection (d)(1) may not be taken into account in determining the amount of any grant under this part.

"(g) For purposes of distribution of funds under this Act to schools funded by the Bureau of Indian Affairs, the Secretary shall use the count of the number of students in each such school funded under the Indian Student Equalization Formula developed pursuant to section 1128 of Public Law 95-561, in lieu of the requirements of this section.

"(c) REDUCTION OF PAYMENT FOR FAILURE TO MAINTAIN FISCAL EFFORT.—(1) The Secretary shall not pay any local educational agency the full amount determined under section 6103 for any fiscal year unless the State educational agency notifies the Secretary, and the Secretary determines, that the combined fiscal effort of that local agency and the State with respect to the provision of free public education by such local agency for the preceding fiscal year, computed on either a per-student or aggregate expenditure basis, was not less than 90 percent of such combined fiscal effort, computed on the same basis, for the second preceding fiscal year.

"(2) If the Secretary determines for any fiscal year that a local educational agency failed to maintain its fiscal effort at the 90 percent level required by paragraph (1), the Secretary shall—

"(A) reduce the amount of the grant that would otherwise be made to the agency under this part in the exact proportion of such agency's failure to maintain its fiscal effort at such level; and

"(B) not use the reduced amount of the agency's expenditures for the preceding year to determine compliance with paragraph (1) for any succeeding fiscal year, but shall use the amount of expenditures that would have been required to comply with paragraph (1).

"(3)(A) The Secretary may waive the requirement of paragraph (1), for not more than one year at a time, if the Secretary determines that the failure to comply with such requirement is due to exceptional or uncontrollable circumstances, such as a natural disaster or a precipitous and unforeseen decline in the agency's financial resources.

"(B) The Secretary shall not use the reduced amount of such agency's expenditures for the fiscal year preceding the fiscal year for which a waiver is granted to determine compliance with paragraph (1) for any succeeding fiscal year, but shall use the amount of expenditures that would have been required to comply with paragraph (1) in the absence of the waiver.

"(d) REALLOCATIONS.—The Secretary may reallocate, in the manner the Secretary determines will best carry out the purpose of this part, any amounts that—

"(1) based on estimates by local educational agencies or other information, will not be needed by such agencies to carry out their approved projects under this part; or

"PART G—BUREAU OF INDIAN AFFAIRS PROGRAMS

"SEC. 6701. STANDARDS FOR THE BASIC EDUCATION OF INDIAN CHILDREN IN BUREAU OF INDIAN AFFAIRS SCHOOLS.

"(a) The purpose of the standards developed under this section shall be to afford Indian students being served by a Bureau funded school with the same opportunities as all other students to achieve the high goals embodied in the Goals 2000: Educate America Act. Consistent with the provisions of this section and section 6711 of this part, the Secretary shall take such actions as are necessary to coordinate standards developed and implemented under this section with those in the State plans developed and implemented pursuant to the GOALS 2000 Educate America Act for the States in which each Bureau funded school operates. In developing and reviewing these standards and such coordination, the Secretary shall utilize the findings and recommendations of the panel established by the Goals 2000: Educate America Act

"(b) The Secretary, in consultation with the Secretary of Education, and in consultation with Indian organizations and tribes, shall carry out or cause to be carried out by contract with an Indian organization such studies and surveys, making the fullest use possible of other existing studies, surveys, and plans, as are necessary to establish and revise standards for the basic education of Indian children attending Bureau funded schools. Such studies and surveys shall take into account factors such as academic needs, local cultural differences, type and level of language skills, geographic isolation, and appropriate teacher-student ratios for such children, and shall be directed toward the attainment of equal educational opportunity for such children.

"(c)(1) Within 18 months of the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall revise the minimum academic standards published in the Federal Register of November 1983 for the basic education of Indian children which are consistent with subsections (a) and (b) of this section and section 6711, and shall distribute such revised standards in the Federal Register for the purpose of receiving comments from the tribes and other interested parties. Within 21 months of the date of enactment of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act Amendments of 1993, the Secretary shall establish final standards, distribute such standards to all the tribes and publish such standards in the Federal Register. The Secretary shall revise such standards periodically as necessary. Prior to any revision of such standards, the Secretary shall distribute such proposed revision to all the tribes, and publish such proposed revision in the Federal Register, for the purpose of receiving comments from the tribes and other interested parties.

"(2) Such standards shall apply to Bureau schools, and subject to subsection (f), to contract and grant schools, and may also serve as a model for educational programs for Indian children in public schools. In establishing and revising such standards, the Secretary shall take into account the special needs of Indian students and the support and reinforcement of the specific cultural heritage of each tribe. Such standards shall include a requirement, developed in coordination with Indian tribes, the affected local school boards, the Indian Health Service of the Department of Health and Human Services, the State health departments, and the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, on immunization for childhood diseases, including provisions for in-school immunization, where necessary.

"(d) The Secretary shall provide alternative or modified standards in lieu of the standards established under subsection (c), where necessary, so that the programs of each school shall be in compliance with the minimum standards required for accreditation of schools in the State where the school is located.

"(e) A tribal governing body, or the local school board so designated by the tribal governing body, shall have the local authority to waive, in part or in whole, the standards established under subsections (c) and (d), where such standards are deemed by such body to be inappropriate or ill-conceived. The tribal governing body or designated school board shall, within 60 days thereafter, submit to the Secretary a proposal for alternative standards that takes into account the specific needs of the tribe's children. Such revised standards shall be established by the Secretary unless specifically rejected by the Secretary for good cause and in writing to the affected tribes or local school board, which rejection shall be final and unreviewable.

"(f)(1) The Secretary, through contracting and grant-making procedures, shall assist school boards of contract and grant schools in the implementation of the standards established under subsection (c) and (d), if the school boards request that such standards, in part or in whole, be implemented. At the request of a contract or grant school board, the Secretary shall provide alternative or modified standards for the standards established under subsections (c) and (d) to take into account the needs of the Indian children and the contract or grant school.

"(2) Within 1 year of the date of the enactment of the Indian Education Technical Amendments Act of 1985, the Bureau shall, either directly or through contract with an Indian organization, establish a consistent system of reporting standards for fiscal control and fund accounting for all contract schools. Such standards shall yield data results comparable to those used by Bureau schools.

"(g) Subject to subsections (e) and (f), the Secretary shall begin to implement the standards established under this section immediately upon the date of their establishment. No later than January 1, 1995, and at each time thereafter that the annual budget request for Bureau educational services is presented, the Secretary shall submit to the appropriate committees of Congress a detailed plan to bring all Bureau and contract and grant schools up to the level required by the applicable standards established under this section. Such plan shall include, but not be limited to, detailed information on the status of each school's educational program in relation to the applicable standards established under this section, specific cost estimates for meeting such standards at each school, and specific time lines for bringing each school up to the level required by such standards.

"(h)(1) Except as specifically required by statute, no school or peripheral dormitory operated by the Bureau of Indian Affairs on or after January 1, 1992, may be closed or consolidated or have its program substantially curtailed unless done according to the requirements of this subsection, except that, in those cases where the tribal governing body, or the local school board concerned (if so designated by the tribal governing body), requests closure or consolidation, the requirements of this subsection shall not apply. The requirements of this subsection shall not apply when a temporary closure, consolidation, or substantial curtailment is required by plant conditions which constitute an immediate hazard to health and safety.

"(2) The Secretary shall, by regulation, promulgate standards and procedures for the closing, consolidation, or substantial curtailment of Bureau schools in accordance with the requirements of this subsection.

"(3) Whenever closure, transfer to any other authority, consolidation, or substantial curtailment of a school is under active consideration or review by any division of the Bureau or the Department of the Interior, the affected tribe, tribal governing body, and designated local school board, will be notified as soon as such consideration or review begins, kept fully and currently informed, and afforded an opportunity to comment with respect to such consideration or review. When a formal decision is made to close, transfer to any other authority, consolidate, or substantially curtail a school, the affected tribe, tribal governing body, and designated local school board shall be notified at least 6 months prior to the end of the school year preceding the proposed effective date. Copies of any such notices and information shall be transmitted promptly to the Congress and published in the Federal Register.

"(4) The Secretary shall make a report to Congress, the affected tribe, and the designated local school board describing the process of the active consideration or review referred to in paragraph (3). At a minimum, the report shall include a study of the impact of such action on the student population, with every effort to identify those students with particular educational and social needs, and to insure that alternative services are available to such students. Such report shall include the description of the consultation conducted between the potential service provider, current service provider, parents, tribal representative and the tribe or tribes involved, and the Director of the Office of Indian Education Programs within the Bureau regarding such students. No irreversible action may be taken in furtherance of any such proposed school closure, transfer to any other authority, consolidation, or substantial curtailment (including any action which would prejudice the personnel or programs of such school) until the end of the first full academic year after such report is made.

"(5) The Secretary may terminate, contract, transfer to any other authority, or consolidate or substantially curtail the operation or facilities of—

"(A) any Bureau funded school that is operated on or after April 1, 1987,

"(B) any program of such a school that is operated on or after April 1, 1987, or

"(C) any school board of a school operated under a grant under the Tribally Controlled Schools Act of 1988 (Public Law 100–297), only if the tribal governing body approves such action.

"(i) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary, for academic program costs, in order to bring all Bureau and contract schools up to the level required by the applicable standards established under this section.

"(j)(1) All schools funded by the Bureau of Indian Affairs shall include within their curriculum a program of instruction relating to alcohol and substance abuse prevention and treatment. The Assistant Secretary shall provide the technical assistance necessary to develop and implement such a program for students in kindergarten and grades 1 through 12, at the request of—

"(A) any Bureau of Indian Affairs school (subject to the approval of the school board of such school);

"(B) any school board of a school operating under a contract entered into under the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act (25 U.S.C. 450 et seq.); or

"(C) any school board of a school operating under a grant under the Tribally Controlled Schools Act of 1988 (Public Law 100–297).

"(2) In schools operated directly by the Bureau of Indian Affairs, the Secretary shall provide for—

"(A) accurate reporting of all incidents relating to alcohol and substance abuse; and

"(B) individual student crisis intervention.

"(3) The programs requested under paragraph (1) shall be developed in consultation with the Indian tribe that is to be served by such program and health personnel in the local community of such tribe.

"(4) Schools requesting program assistance under this subsection are encouraged to involve family units and, where appropriate, tribal elders and Native healers in such instructions.

"(k) For purposes of this section, the term "tribal governing body" means, with respect to any school, the tribal governing body, or tribal governing bodies, that represent at least 90 percent of the students served by such school.

"(l)(1)(A) The Secretary shall only consider the factors described in subparagraphs (B) and (C) in reviewing—

"(i) applications from any tribe for the awarding of a contract or grant for a school that is not a Bureau funded school,

"(ii) applications from any tribe or school board of any Bureau funded school for—

"(I) a school which is not a Bureau funded school; or

"(II) the expansion of a Bureau funded school which would increase the amount of funds received by the Indian tribe or school board under section 6707.

The Secretary shall give consideration to all of such factors, but none of such applications may be denied based primarily upon the geographic proximity of public education.

"(B) The Secretary shall consider the following factors relating to the program that is the subject of an application described in subparagraph (A):

"(i) the adequacy of facilities or the potential to obtain or provide adequate facilities;

"(ii) geographic and demographic factors in the affected areas;

"(iii) adequacy of the applicant's program plans or, in the case of a Bureau funded school, of projected needs analysis done either by a tribe or by Bureau personnel;

"(iv) geographic proximity of comparable public education; and

"(v) the stated needs of all affected parties, including (but not limited to) students, families, tribal governments at both the central and local levels, and school organizations.

"(C) The Secretary shall consider with respect to applications described in subparagraph (A) the following factors relating to all the educational services available at the time the application is considered:

"(i) geographic and demographic factors in the affected areas;

"(ii) adequacy and comparability of programs already available;

"(iii) consistency of available programs with tribal educational codes or tribal legislation on education; and

"(iv) the history and success of these services for the proposed population to be served, as determined from all factors and not just standardized examination performance.

"(2)(A) The Secretary shall make a determination of whether to approve any application described in paragraph (1)(A) by no later than the date that is 180 days after the day on which such application is submitted to the Secretary.

"(B) If the Secretary fails to make the determination described in subparagraph (A) with respect to an application by the date described in subparagraph (A), the application shall be treated as having been approved by the Secretary.

"(3)(A) Any application described in paragraph (1)(A) may be submitted to the Secretary only if—

"(i) the application has been approved by the tribal governing body of the students served by (or to be served by) the school or program that is the subject of the application, and

"(ii) written evidence of such approval is submitted with the application.

"(B) Each application described in paragraph (1)(A)—

"(i) shall provide information concerning each of the factors described in paragraph (1)(B), and

"(ii) may provide information concerning the factors described in paragraph (1)(C).

"(4) Whenever the Secretary makes a determination to deny approval of any application described in paragraph (1)(A), the Secretary shall—

"(A) state the objections in writing to the applicant by no later than the date that is 180 days after the day on which the application is submitted to the Secretary,

"(B) provide assistance to the applicant to overcome stated objections, and

"(C) provide the applicant a hearing, under the same rules and regulations pertaining to the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act, and an opportunity to appeal the objections raised by the Secretary.

"(5)(A) Except as otherwise provided in this paragraph, the action which is the subject of any application described in paragraph (1)(A) that is approved by the Secretary shall become effective with the commencement of the academic year succeeding the fiscal year in which the application is approved, or at an earlier date determined by the Secretary.

"(B) If an application is treated as having been approved by the Secretary by reason of paragraph (2)(B), the action that is the subject of the application shall become effective on the date that is 18 months after the date on which the application is submitted to the Secretary, or at an earlier date determined by the Secretary.

"SEC. 6702. NATIONAL CRITERIA FOR DORMITORY SITUATIONS.

"(a) The Secretary, in consultation with the Secretary of the Department of Education, and in consultation with Indian organizations and tribes, shall conduct or cause to be conducted by contract with an Indian organization, a study of the costs applicable to boarding arrangements for Indian students provided in Bureau and contract and grant schools, for the purpose of establishing national criteria for such dormitory situations. Such criteria shall include adult-child ratios, needs for counselors (including special needs related to off-reservation boarding arrangements), space, and privacy.

"(b) No later than January 1, 1996, the Secretary shall propose such criteria, and shall distribute such proposed criteria to the tribes and publish such proposed criteria in the Federal Register for the purpose of receiving comments from the tribes and other interested parties. Within eighteen months of the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall establish final criteria, distribute such criteria to all the tribes, and publish such criteria in the Federal Register. The Secretary shall revise such criteria periodically as necessary. Any revisions to the standards established under this section shall be developed subject to requirements established under section 6711.

"(c) The Secretary shall begin to implement the criteria established under this section immediately upon the date of their establishment. No later than January 1, 1981, and at each time thereafter that the annual budget request for Bureau educational services is presented, the Secretary shall submit to the appropriate committees of Congress a detailed plan to bring all Bureau and contract boarding schools up to the criteria established under this section. Such plan shall include, but not be limited to, predictions for the relative need for each boarding school in the future, detailed information on the status of each school in relation to the criteria established under this section, specific cost estimates for meeting such criteria at each school, and specific time lines for bringing each school up to the level required by such criteria.

"(d)(1) The criteria established under this section may be waived in the same manner as the standards provided under section 6701(c) may be waived under section 6701(e).

"(2) No school in operation on or before January 1, 1987 (regardless of compliance or noncompliance with the criteria established under this section) may be closed, transferred to another authority, consolidated or have its program substantially curtailed for failure to meet the criteria.

"(3) By no later than May 1, 1996, the Secretary shall submit to the Congress a report detailing the costs associated with, and the actions necessary for, complete compliance with the criteria established under this section.

"(e) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary in order to bring each school up to the level required by the criteria established under this section.

"SEC. 6703. REGULATIONS.

"(a) The provisions of part 32 of title 25 of the Code of Federal Regulations, as in effect on January 1, 1987, are hereby incorporated into this Act and shall be treated as though such provisions are set forth in this subsection. Accordingly, such provisions may be altered only by means of an amendment to this subsection that is contained in an Act or joint resolution which is enacted into law. To the extent that such provisions of part 32 do not conform with this Act or any statutory provision of law enacted before the date of enactment of this Act, the provisions of this Act and the provisions of such other statutory law shall govern.

"(b) The provisions of parts 31, 33, 36, 39, 42, and 43 of title 25 of the Code of Federal Regulations, as in effect on January 1, 1987, shall be applied by the Federal Government and shall not, before July 1, 1989, be amended, revoked, or altered in any manner. No officer or employee of the Executive Branch shall have the authority to issue any other regulations, prior to July 1, 1989, that supersede, supplement, or otherwise affect the provisions of such parts. To the extent that the provisions of such parts do not conform with this Act or any statutory provision of law enacted before the date of enactment of this Act, the provisions of this Act and the provisions of such other statutory law shall govern.

"(c) After June 30, 1989, no regulation prescribed for the application of any program provided under this title shall become effective unless—

"(1) the regulation has been published as a proposed regulation in the Federal Register,

"(2) an opportunity of no less than 90 days has been afforded the public to comment on the published proposed regulation, and

"(3) the regulation has, after such period for public comment, been published in the Federal Register as a final regulation.

"(d) For purposes of this section, the term "regulation" means any rules, regulations, guidelines, interpretations, orders, or requirements of general applicability prescribed by any officer or employee of the Executive Branch.

"SEC. 6704. SCHOOL BOUNDARIES.

"(b)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), on or after July 1, 1985, no attendance area shall be changed or established with respect to any such school unless the tribal governing body or the local school board concerned (if so designated by the tribal governing body) has been (i) afforded at least six months notice of the intention of the Bureau to change or establish such attendance area, and (ii) given the opportunity to propose alternative boundaries. Any tribe may petition the Secretary for revision of existing attendance area boundaries. The Secretary shall accept such proposed alternative or revised boundaries unless the Secretary finds, after consultation with the affected tribe or tribes, that such revised boundaries do not reflect the needs of the Indian students to be served or do not provide adequate stability to all of the affected programs.

"(2) In any case where there is more than 1 Bureau funded school located on an Indian reservation, at the direction of the tribal governing body, the relevant school boards of the Bureau funded schools on the reservation may, by mutual consent, establish the relevant attendance areas for such schools, subject to the approval of the tribal governing body. Any such boundaries so established shall be accepted by the Secretary.

"(c) In any case where there is only 1 Bureau operated program located on an Indian reservation, the attendance area for the program shall be the boundaries of the reservation served, and those students residing near the reservation shall also receive services from such program.

"(d) The Bureau of Indian Affairs shall include in the final rules the requirement that each appropriate education line officer coordinate and consult with the affected tribes and relevant school boards in the establishment of such geographic boundaries.

"SEC. 6705. FACILITIES CONSTRUCTION.

"(a) The Secretary shall immediately begin to bring all schools, dormitories, and other facilities operated by the Bureau or under contract or grant with the Bureau in connection with the education of Indian children into compliance with all applicable Federal, tribal, or State health and safety standards, whichever provide greater protection (except that the tribal standards to be applied shall be no greater than any otherwise applicable Federal or State standards), and with section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. 794) and with the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990, except that nothing in this section shall require termination of the operations of any facility which does not comply with such provisions and which is in use on the date of enactment of this Act.

"(b) By January 1, 1996, and at each time thereafter that the annual budget request for Bureau educational services is presented, the Secretary shall submit to the appropriate committees of Congress a detailed plan to bring such facilities into compliance with such standards. Such plan shall include, but not be limited to, detailed information on the status of each facility's compliance with such standards, specific cost estimates for meeting such standards at each school, and specific time lines for bringing each school into compliance with such standards.

"(c) Within six months of the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall submit to the appropriate committees of Congress, and publish in the Federal Register, the system used to establish priorities for school construction projects. At the time any budget request for school construction is presented, the Secretary shall publish in the Federal Register and submit with the budget request the current list of all school construction priorities.

"(d)(1) A Bureau school may be closed or consolidated, and the programs of a Bureau school may be substantially curtailed, by reason of plant conditions that constitute an immediate hazard to health and safety only if a health and safety officer of the Bureau determines that such conditions exist at the Bureau school.

"(2)(A) In making determinations described in paragraph (1) before July 1, 1989, health and safety officers of the Bureau shall use the health and safety guidelines of the Bureau that were in effect on January 1, 1988.

"(B)(i) If—

"(I) the Secretary fails to publish in the Federal Register in final form before July 1, 1989, and

"(II) action described in paragraph (1) is taken after June 30, 1989, and before the date on which such regulations are published in final form in the Federal Register by reason of the condition of any plant, an inspection of the condition of such plant shall be conducted by an appropriate tribal, county, municipal, or State health and safety officer to determine whether conditions at such plant constitute an immediate hazard to health and safety. Such inspection shall be completed by no later than the date that is 30 days after the date on which the action described in paragraph (1) is taken.

"(ii) The inspection required under clause (i) shall be conducted by a health and safety officer designated jointly by the Secretary and the tribes affected by the action described in paragraph (1). If the Secretary and such tribes are unable to agree on the designation of the health and safety officer, the Secretary shall designate the health and safety officer and shall provide notice of such designation to each of such tribes before the inspection is conducted by such officer.

"(iii) If the health and safety officer conducting an inspection of a plant required under clause (i) determines that conditions at the plant do not constitute an immediate hazard to health and safety, any consolidation or curtailment that was made by reason of conditions at the plant shall immediately cease and any school closed by reason of conditions at the plant shall be reopened immediately.

"(3) If—

"(A) a Bureau school is temporarily closed or consolidated, or the programs of a Bureau school are substantially curtailed, by reason of plant conditions that constitute an immediate hazard to health and safety, and

"(B) the Secretary estimates that the closure, consolidation, or curtailment will be more than 1 year in duration, the Secretary shall submit to the Congress, by no later than the date that is 6 months after the date on which the closure, consolidation, or curtailment is initiated, a report which sets forth the reasons for such temporary actions and the actions the Secretary is taking to eliminate the conditions that constitute the hazard.

"(e) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out subsection (a).

"SEC. 6706. BUREAU OF INDIAN AFFAIRS EDUCATION FUNCTIONS.

"(a) The Secretary shall vest in the Assistant Secretary for Indian Affairs all functions with respect to formulation and establishment of policy and procedure, and supervision of programs and expenditures of Federal funds for the purpose of Indian education administered by the Bureau. The Assistant Secretary shall carry out such functions through the Director of the Office of Indian Education.

"(b) The Director of the Office shall direct and supervise the operations of all personnel directly and substantially involved with provision of education services by the Bureau, including (but not limited to) school or institution custodial or maintenance personnel. The Assistant Secretary for Indian Affairs shall provide for the adequate coordination between the affected Bureau Offices and the Office to facilitate the consideration of all contract functions relating to education. Except as required by section 6709(d), nothing in this Act shall be construed to require the provision of separate support services for Indian education.

"(c) Education personnel who are under the direction and supervision of the Director of the Office in accordance with the first sentence of subsection (b) shall—

"(1) monitor and evaluate Bureau education programs,

"(2) provide all services and support functions for education programs with respect to personnel matters involving staffing actions and functions, and

"(3) provide technical and coordinating assistance in areas such as procurement, contracting, budgeting, personnel, and curriculum.

"(d)(1) The Assistant Secretary shall submit in the annual Budget a plan—

"(A) for school facilities to be constructed under the system required by section 6705(c);

"(B) for establishing priorities among projects and for the improvement and repair of education facilities, which together shall form the basis for the distribution of appropriated funds; and

"(C) including a 5-year plan for capital improvements.

"(2) The Assistant Secretary shall establish a program, including the distribution of appropriated funds, for the operation and maintenance of education facilities. Such program shall include, but not be limited to—

"(A) a method of computing the amount necessary for each education facility;

"(B) similar treatment of all Bureau funded schools;

"(C) a notice of an allocation of appropriated funds from the Director of the Office directly to the appropriate education line officers; and

"(D) a system for the conduct of routine preventive maintenance.

The appropriate education line officers shall make arrangements for the maintenance of education facilities with the local supervisors of the Bureau maintenance personnel who are under the authority of the agency superintendent or area directors, respectively. The local supervisors of Bureau maintenance personnel shall take appropriate action to implement the decisions made in this regard by the appropriate education line officers, except that no funds from this program may be authorized for expenditure unless such appropriate education line officer is assured that the necessary maintenance has been, or will be, provided in a reasonable manner. Subject to the requirements of subsection (b) of this section, nothing in this Act shall be construed to require the provision of separate operations and maintenance personnel for the Office.

"(3) The requirements of this subsection shall be implemented no later than July 1, 1995.

"(e) Any other provision of law notwithstanding, the Director shall promulgate guidelines for the establishment of mechanisms for the acceptance of gifts and bequests for the use of, and benefit of, particular schools or designated Bureau operated education programs, including, where appropriate, the establishment and administration of trust funds. When a Bureau operated program is the beneficiary of such a gift or bequest, the Director shall make provisions for monitoring its use, and shall report to the appropriate committees of Congress the amount and terms of such gift and bequest, the use to which it is put, and any positive results achieved by such action.

"(f) For the purpose of this section the term "functions" includes powers and duties.

"SEC. 6707. ALLOTMENT FORMULA.

"(a) The Secretary shall establish, by regulation adopted in accordance with section 6719, a formula for determining the minimum annual amount of funds necessary to sustain each Bureau funded school. In establishing such formula, the Secretary shall consider—

"(1) the number of eligible Indian students served and size of the school;

"(2) special cost factors, such as—

"(A) isolation of the school;

"(B) need for special staffing, transportation, or educational programs;

"(C) food and housing costs;

"(D) maintenance and repair costs associated with the physical condition of the educational facilities;

"(E) special transportation and other costs of isolated and small schools;

"(F) the costs of boarding arrangements, where determined necessary by a tribal governing body or designated local school board;

"(G) costs associated with greater lengths of service by educational personnel; and

"(H) special programs for gifted and talented students;

"(3) the cost of providing academic services which are at least equivalent to those provided by public schools in the State in which the school is located;

"(4) such other relevant factors as the Secretary determines are appropriate.

Upon the establishment of the standards required by sections 6701 and 6702 of this Act, the Secretary shall revise the formula established under this subsection to reflect the cost and funding standards so established. Prior to January 1, 1995, the Secretary shall review the formula established under this section and shall take such steps as may be necessary to increase the availability of counseling services for students in off-reservation boarding schools and other Bureau operated residential facilities. Concurrent with such action, the Secretary shall review the standards established under section 6701 of this title to be certain that adequate provision is made for parental notification regarding, and consent for, such counseling services.

"(b) Notwithstanding any other provisions of law, Federal funds appropriated for the general local operation of Bureau funded schools, shall be allotted pro rata in accordance with the formula established under subsection (a).

"(c)(1) For fiscal year 1990, and for each subsequent fiscal year, the Secretary shall adjust the formula established under subsection (a) to—

"(A) use a weighted unit of 1.2 for each eligible Indian student enrolled in the seventh and eighth grades of the school in considering the number of eligible Indian students served by the school;

"(B) consider a school with an enrollment of less than 50 eligible Indian students as having an average daily attendance of 50 eligible Indian students for purposes of implementing the adjustment factor for small schools; and

"(C) take into account the provision of residential services on a less than 9-month basis at a school when the school board and supervisor of the school determine that a less than 9-month basis will be implemented for the school year involved.

"(2)(A) The Secretary shall reserve for national school board training 0.2 percent of the funds appropriated for each fiscal year for distribution under this section. Such training shall be conducted through the same organizations through which, and in the same manner in which, the training was conducted in fiscal year 1992. If the contract for such training is not awarded before May 1 of each fiscal year, the contract under which such training was provided for the fiscal year preceding such fiscal year shall be renewed by the Secretary for such fiscal year. The agenda for the training sessions shall be established by the school boards through their regional or national organizations.

"(B) For each year in which the Secretary uses a weighted unit formula established under subsection (a) to fund Bureau schools, a Bureau school which generates less than 168 weighted units shall receive an additional 2 weighted units to defray school board activities.

"(C) From the funds allotted in accordance with the formula established under subsection (a) for each Bureau school, the local school board of such school may reserve an amount which does not exceed the greater of—

"(i) $5,000, or

"(ii) the lesser of—

"(I) $15,000, or

"(II) 1 percent of such allotted funds, for school board activities for such school, including but not limited to, and notwithstanding any other provision of law, meeting expenses and the cost of membership in, and support of, organizations engaged in activities on behalf of Indian education.

"(3)(A) The Secretary shall adjust the formula established under subsection (a) to use a weighted unit of 2.0 for each eligible Indian student that—

"(i) is gifted and talented (as determined pursuant to section 6204 of the Indian Education Act of 1988), and

"(ii) is enrolled in the school on a full-time basis, in considering the number of eligible Indian students served by the school.

"(B) The adjustment required under subparagraph (A) shall be used for the later of the following fiscal years and for each fiscal year succeeding such later fiscal year:

"(i) the second fiscal year succeeding the fiscal year in which the Secretary of Education makes the report required under section 6204(c)(6)(B) of the Indian Education Act of 1988, or

"(ii) the first fiscal year for which an increase in the amount of funds appropriated for allotment under this section is designated by the law that appropriates such funds as the amount necessary to implement such adjustment without reducing allotments made under this section to any school.

"(d) The Secretary shall reserve from the funds available for distribution for each fiscal year under this section an amount which, in the aggregate, shall equal 1 percent of the funds available for such purpose for that fiscal year. Such funds shall be used, at the discretion of the Director of the Office, to meet emergencies and unforeseen contingencies affecting the education programs funded under this section. Funds reserved under this subsection may only be expended for education services or programs at a schoolsite (as defined in section 5204(c)(2) of the Tribally Controlled Schools Act of 1988). Funds reserved under this subsection shall remain available without fiscal year limitation until expended. However, the aggregate amount available from all fiscal years may not exceed 1 percent of the current year funds. Whenever the Secretary makes funds available under this subsection, the Secretary shall report such action to the appropriate committees of Congress within the annual budget submission.

"(e) Supplemental appropriations enacted to meet increased pay costs attributable to school level personnel shall be distributed under this section.

"(1) is a member of or is at least a ¼ degree Indian blood descendant of a member of an Indian tribe which is eligible for the special programs and services provided by the United States through the Bureau of Indian Affairs to Indians because of their status as Indians, and

"(2) resides on or near an Indian reservation or meets the criteria for attendance at a Bureau off-reservation boarding school.

"(g)(1) An eligible Indian student may not be charged tuition for attendance at a Bureau or contract school. A student attending a Bureau school under clause (2)(C) of this subsection may not be charged tuition.

"(2) The Secretary may permit the attendance at a Bureau school of a student who is not an eligible Indian student if—

"(A) the Secretary determines that the student's attendance will not adversely affect the school's program for eligible Indian students because of cost, overcrowding, or violation of standards,

"(B) the school board consents, and

"(C) the student is a dependent of a Bureau, Indian Health Service, or tribal government employee who lives on or near the school site, or

"(D) a tuition is paid for the student that is not more than that charged by the nearest public school district for out-of-district students. The tuition collected is in addition to the school's allocation under this section.

"(3) The school board of a contract school or grant school may permit students who are not eligible Indian students under this subsection to attend its contract school or grant school and any tuition collected for those students is in addition to funding under this section.

"(h)(1) The Secretary shall conduct, through contact or cooperative agreement with an entity having proven expertise in the field of school finance, and after consultation with tribes and national Indian organizations, a study to determine the feasibility and desirability of changing the method of financing for Bureau funded schools from the weighted student unit formula method in effect on the date of enactment of this Act to a school based budget system of financing. The Assistant Secretary shall take such steps as are necessary to immediately implement this provision.

"(2) For the purposes of this study, the term 'school-based budget system' means a system based upon an initial determination, at each school site, of the number of students who shall be served at the site, the needs of those students, the standards which will best meet those needs (including any standards or conditions reflecting local community input and the program developed under this part), the personnel profile necessary to establish such program and the cost (determined on an actual basis) of funding such a program. Such a system would include procedures to aggregate the determinations for each school site to determine the amount needed to fund all Bureau-funded schools, to prepare a budget submission based upon such aggregate and would provide for a mechanism for distributing such sums as may be appropriated based upon the determination at each school site.

"(3) No later than January 20, 1996, the Secretary shall transmit to the Committees on Education and Labor and Appropriations of the House of Representatives and the Committees on Indian Affairs and Appropriations of the Senate of the United States the study required under this subsection, along with any views or comments of the Secretary on such study.

"(i) Any other provision of law notwithstanding, at the election of the school board made at any time during the fiscal year, a portion equal to no more than 15 percent of the funds allocated with respect to a school under this section for any fiscal year shall remain available to the school for expenditure without fiscal year limitation. The Assistant Secretary shall take steps as may be necessary to implement this provision immediately.

"(j) Tuition for the out-of-State students boarding at the Richfield Dormitory in Richfield, Utah, who attend Sevier County high schools in Richfield, Utah, may be paid from the Indian School Equalization Program funds at a rate not to exceed the amount per Weighted Student Unit for that year for instruction. No additional administrative cost funds will be added to the grant.

"SEC. 6708. ADMINISTRATIVE COST GRANTS.

"(a)(1) The Secretary shall, subject to the availability of appropriated funds, provide grants to each tribe or tribal organization operating a contract or grant school in the amount determined under this section with respect to the tribe or tribal organization for the purpose of paying the administrative and indirect costs incurred in operating contract schools in order to—

"(A) enable tribes and tribal organizations operating such schools, without reducing direct program services to the beneficiaries of the program, to provide all related administrative overhead services and operations necessary to meet the requirements of law and prudent management practice, and

"(B) carry out other necessary support functions which would otherwise be provided by the Secretary or other Federal officers or employees, from resources other than direct program funds, in support of comparable Bureau operated programs.

"(2) Amounts appropriated to fund the grants provided under this section shall be in addition to, and shall not reduce, the amounts appropriated for the program being administered by the contract schools.

"(b)(1) The amount of the grant provided to each tribe or tribal organization under this section for each fiscal year shall be determined by applying the administrative cost percentage rate of the tribe or tribal organization to the aggregate of the Bureau elementary and secondary functions operated by the tribe or tribal organization for which funds are received from or through the Bureau. The administrative cost percentage rate determined under subsection (c) does not apply to other programs operated by the tribe or tribal organization.

"(2) The Secretary shall—

"(A) reduce the amount of the grant determined under paragraph (1) to the extent that payments for administrative costs are actually received by an Indian tribe or tribal organization under any Federal education program included in the direct cost base of the tribe or tribal organization, and

"(B) take such actions as may be necessary to be reimbursed by any other department or agency of the Federal Government for the portion of grants made under this section for the costs of administering any program for Indians that is funded by appropriations made to such other department or agency.

"(c) For purposes of this section, the administrative cost percentage rate for a contract or grant school for a fiscal year is equal to the percentage determined by dividing—

"(1) the sum of—

"(A) the amount equal to—

"(i) the direct cost base of the tribe or tribal organization for the fiscal year, multiplied by

"(ii) the minimum base rate, plus

"(B) the amount equal to—

"(i) the standard direct cost base, multiplied by

"(ii) the maximum base rate, by

"(2) the sum of—

"(A) the direct cost base of the tribe or tribal organization for the fiscal year, plus

"(B) the standard direct cost base.

The administrative cost percentage rate shall be determined to the $\frac{1}{100}$ of a decimal point.

"(d)(1)(A) Funds received by a tribe or contract or grant school as grants under this section for tribal elementary or secondary educational programs may be combined by the tribe or contract school into a single administrative cost account without the necessity of maintaining separate funding source accounting.

"(B) Indirect cost funds for programs at the school which share common administrative services with tribal elementary or secondary educational programs may be included in the administrative cost account described in subparagraph (A).

"(2) Funds received as grants under this section with respect to tribal elementary or secondary education programs shall remain available to the contract or grant school without fiscal year limitation and without diminishing the amount of any grants otherwise payable to the school under this section for any fiscal year beginning after the fiscal year for which the grant is provided.

"(3) Funds received as grants under this section for Bureau funded programs operated by a tribe or tribal organization under a contract or agreement shall not be taken into consideration for purposes of indirect cost underrecovery and overrecovery determinations by any Federal agency for any other funds, from whatever source derived.

"(4) In applying this section and section 106 of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act with respect to an Indian tribe or tribal organization that—

"(A) receives funds under this section for administrative costs incurred in operating a contract school or a school operated under the Tribally Controlled Schools Act of 1988, and

"(B) operates 1 or more other programs under a contract or grant provided under the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act, the Secretary shall ensure that the Indian tribe or tribal organization is provided with the full amount of the administrative costs, and of the indirect costs, that are associated with operating the contract school, a school operated under the Tribally Controlled Schools Act of 1988, and all of such other programs, except that funds appropriated for implementation of this section shall be used only to supply the amount of the grant required to be provided by this section.

"(e) For purposes of this section—

"(1)(A) The term 'administrative cost' means the costs of necessary administrative functions which—

"(i) the tribe or tribal organization incurs as a result of operating a tribal elementary or secondary educational program,

"(ii) are not customarily paid by comparable Bureau operated programs out of direct program funds, and

"(iii) are either—

"(I) normally provided for comparable Bureau programs by Federal officials using resources other than Bureau direct program funds, or

"(II) are otherwise required of tribal self-determination program operators by law or prudent management practice.

"(B) The term 'administrative cost' may include, but is not necessarily limited to—

"(i) contract (or other agreement) administration;

"(ii) executive, policy, and corporate leadership and decisionmaking;

"(iii) program planning, development, and management;

"(iv) fiscal, personnel, property, and procurement management;

"(v) related office services and record keeping; and

"(vi) costs of necessary insurance, auditing, legal, safety and security services.

"(2) The term 'Bureau elementary and secondary functions' means—

"(A) all functions funded at Bureau schools by the Office of Indian Education Programs of the Bureau;

"(B) all programs—

"(i) funds for which are appropriated to other agencies of the Federal Government, and

"(ii) which are administered for the benefit of Indians through Bureau schools; and

"(C) all operation, maintenance, and repair funds for facilities and government quarters used in the operation or support of elementary and secondary education functions for the benefit of Indians, from whatever source derived.

"(3) The term 'tribal elementary or secondary educational programs' means all Bureau elementary and secondary functions, together with any other Bureau programs or portions of programs (excluding funds for social services that are appropriated to agencies other than the Bureau and are expended through the Bureau, funds for major subcontracts, construction, and other major capital expenditures, and unexpended funds carried over from prior years) which share common administrative cost functions, that are operated directly by a tribe or tribal organization under a contract or agreement with the Bureau.

"(4)(A) Except as otherwise provided in this paragraph, the direct cost base of a tribe or tribal organization for the fiscal year is the aggregate direct cost program funding for all tribal elementary or secondary educational programs operated by the tribe or tribal organization during—

"(i) the second fiscal year preceding such fiscal year, or

"(ii) if such programs have not been operated by the tribe or tribal organization during the 2 preceding fiscal years, the first fiscal year preceding such fiscal year.

"(B) In the case of Bureau elementary or secondary education functions which have not previously been operated by a tribe or tribal organization under contract or agreement with the Bureau, the direct cost base for the initial year shall be the projected aggregate direct cost program funding for all Bureau elementary and secondary functions to be operated by the tribe or tribal organization during that fiscal year.

"(5) The term 'maximum base rate' means 50 percent.

"(6) The term 'minimum base rate' means 11 percent.

"(7) The term 'standard direct cost base' means $600,000.

"(f)(1) Upon the enactment of the Indian Education Amendments of 1988, the Secretary shall—

"(A) conduct such studies as may be needed to establish an empirical basis for determining relevant factors substantially affecting the required administrative costs of tribal elementary and secondary educational programs, using the formula set forth in subsection (c), and

"(B) a study to determine—

"(i) a maximum base rate which ensures that the amount of the grants provided under this section will provide adequate (but not excessive) funding of the administrative costs of the smallest tribal elementary or secondary educational programs,

"(ii) a minimum base rate which ensures that the amount of the grants provided under this section will provide adequate (but not excessive) funding of the administrative costs of the largest tribal elementary or secondary educational programs, and

"(iii) a standard direct cost base which is the aggregate direct cost funding level for which the percentage determined under subsection (c) will—

"(I) be equal to the median between the maximum base rate and the minimum base rate, and

"(II) ensure that the amount of the grants provided under this section will provide adequate (but not excessive) funding of the administrative costs of tribal elementary or secondary educational programs closest to the size of the program.

"(2) The studies required under paragraph (1) shall—

"(A) be conducted in full consultation (in accordance with section 1130) with—

"(i) the tribes and tribal organizations that are affected by the application of the formula set forth in subsection (c), and

"(ii) all national and regional Indian organizations of which such tribes and tribal organizations are typically members;

"(B) be conducted on-site at a representative statistical sample of the tribal elementary or secondary educational programs under a contract entered into with a nationally reputable public accounting and business consulting firm;

"(C) take into account the availability of skilled labor, commodities, business and automatic data processing services, related Indian preference and Indian control of education requirements, and any other market factors found substantially to affect the administrative costs and efficiency of each such tribal elementary or secondary educational program studied in order to assure that all required administrative activities can reasonably be delivered in a cost effective manner for each such program, given an administrative cost allowance generated by the values, percentages, or other factors found in the studies to be relevant in such formula;

"(D) identify, and quantify in terms of percentages of direct program costs, any general factors arising from geographic isolation, or numbers of programs administered, independent of program size factors used to compute a base administrative cost percentage in such formula; and

"(E) identify any other incremental cost factors substantially affecting the costs of required administrative cost functions at any of the tribal elementary or secondary educational programs studied and determine whether the factors are of general applicability to other such programs, and (if so) how they may effectively be incorporated into such formula.

"(3) In carrying out the studies required under this subsection, the Secretary shall obtain the input of, and afford an opportunity to participate to, the Inspector General of the Department of the Interior.

"(4) Determinations described in paragraph (2)(C) shall be based on what is pragmatically possible to do at each location studied, given prudent management practice, irrespective of whether required administrative services were actually or fully delivered at these sites, or other services were delivered instead, during the period of the study.

"(5) Upon completion of the studies conducted under paragraph (1), but in no case later than October 1, 1989, the Secretary shall submit to the Congress a report on the findings of the studies, together with determinations based upon such findings that would affect the definitions of terms used in the formula that is set forth in subsection (c).

"(6) The Secretary shall include in the Bureau's justification for each appropriations request for each fiscal year beginning after fiscal year 1989, a projection of the overall costs associated with the formula set forth in subsection (c) for all tribal elementary or secondary educational programs which the Secretary expects to be funded in the fiscal year for which the appropriations are sought.

"(7) For purposes of this subsection, the size of tribal elementary or secondary educational programs is determined by the aggregate direct cost program funding level for all Bureau funded programs which share common administrative cost functions.

"(g)(1) There are authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

"(2) If the total amount of funds necessary to provide grants to tribes and tribal organizations in the amounts determined under subsection (b) for a fiscal year exceeds the amount of funds appropriated to carry out this section for such fiscal year, the Secretary shall reduce the amount of each grant determined under subsection (b) for such fiscal year by an amount that bears the same relationship to such excess as the amount of such grant determined under subsection (b) bears to the total of all grants determined under subsection (b) for all tribes and tribal organizations for such fiscal year.

"(h)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, the amount of the grants provided under this section for fiscal year 1989 shall—

"(A) in lieu of being determined under subsection (b), be determined for each tribal elementary or secondary educational program on the same basis that indirect costs were determined for such programs for fiscal year 1988, and

"(B) be subject to the provisions of subsection (d).

"(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, the amount of the grant provided under this section for fiscal year 1990 with respect to each tribal elementary and secondary educational program that was operated by a tribe or tribal organization in fiscal year 1989 shall be equal to—

"(A) if the amount of the grant determined under subsection (b) for fiscal year 1990 with respect to such program exceeds the amount received by the tribe or tribal organization with respect to such program for administrative costs for fiscal year 1988 (or fiscal year 1989 if such program was not operated by the tribe or tribal organization during fiscal year 1988), the sum of—

"(i) such amount received, plus

"(ii) ⅓ of the excess of—

"(I) such amount determined under subsection (b), over

"(II) such amount received, or

"(B) if such amount received exceeds such amount determined under subsection (b), the excess of—

"(i) such amount received, over

"(ii) an amount equal to ⅓ of the excess of—

"(I) such amount received, over

"(II) such amount determined under subsection (b).

"(3) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, the amount of the grants provided under this section for fiscal year 1991 with respect to each tribal elementary and secondary educational program that was operated by a tribe or tribal organization in fiscal year 1989 shall be equal to—

"(A) if the amount of the grant determined under subsection (b) for fiscal year 1991 with respect to such program exceeds the amount received by the tribe or tribal organization with respect to such program for administrative costs for fiscal year 1990, the sum of—

"(i) such amount received, plus

"(ii) ½ of the excess of—

"(I) such amount determined under subsection (b), over

"(II) such amount received, or

"(B) if such amount received exceeds such amount determined under subsection (b), the excess of—

"(i) such amount received, over

"(ii) an amount equal to ½ of the excess of—

"(I) such amount received over,

"(II) such amount determined under subsection (b).

"(i) The provisions of this section shall also apply to those schools operating under the Tribally Controlled Schools Act of 1988.

"SEC. 6709. BUDGET PREPARATION AND SUBMISSION.

"(a) For each fiscal year beginning after October 1, 1994, and ending before October 1, 1998, the Secretary shall enter into an interagency agreement with the Secretary of Education for the purpose of carrying out this section. The Secretary shall take such actions as are necessary to transfer information requested by the Secretary of Education or the entity designated under subsection (b) of this section needed to carry out this section in a timely and accurate fashion.

"(b) The Secretary of Education, through the National Center for Education Statistics, shall prepare and submit to Congress the study set forth in subsection (c) of this section no later than January 20, 1995, and January 20 of each of the next 3 succeeding years. The Secretary of Education shall transmit the report directly and without substantive amendment to the Secretary of the Interior, the Assistant Secretary for Indian Affairs of the Department of the Interior, and the Committees on Education and Labor and Appropriations of the House of Representatives and the Committees on Indian Affairs and Appropriations of the Senate of the United States.

"(c)(1) The National Center for Educational Statistics (hereinafter referred to as the 'Center') shall prepare for each of the fiscal years covered under subsection (a) of this section a report on the amount needed to achieve academic and residential programs set forth in this part for Bureau-funded schools funded under section 6707. Such study shall be based on (A) the standards developed and implemented for Bureau-funded schools under section 6701 and 6702 of this part or such other standards as may apply to Bureau-funded contract schools or schools funded under the Tribally Controlled Schools Act of 1988, (B) the student count and characteristics of such schools, as determined pursuant to the formula developed and implemented pursuant to section 6707 of this part for the preceding academic year, adjusted for any changes in student demographics which the Center may project, (C) the employee statistics with respect to such schools for the preceding fiscal year, and (D) such other factors as the Center may set forth, including but not limited to age or physical condition of the schools and changes in isolation.

"(2) Each study shall include a total projected cost for attaining the standards set forth under paragraph (1), and shall presume compliance with those standards. Such study shall also include a projection of the cost for meeting such standards for each Bureau funded school. Such study shall also include a report on any shortfall in the amount needed to fund Bureau-funded schools, as determined by the study conducted pursuant to this section and the appropriations amount requested and enacted for the period covered by the study.

"(d)(1) Within 24 months of the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall establish within the Office of Indian Education Programs a Division of Budget Analysis (hereinafter referred to as the 'Division'). Such Division shall be under the direct supervision and control of the Director of the Office.

"(2) The Division shall have the capacity to conduct such studies, surveys, or other activities as are necessary to gather demographic information on Bureau-funded schools (current and future) and project the amount necessary to provide Indian students in such schools the educational program set forth in this part.

"(3) The Division shall prepare projections on such amounts, along with such other information as the Director of the Office shall require, for each fiscal year beginning after October 1, 1996. The Director of the Office and the Assistant Secretary for Indian Affairs shall use such reports when preparing their annual budget submissions.

"SEC. 6710. UNIFORM DIRECT FUNDING AND SUPPORT.

"(a)(1) Within six months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall establish, by regulation adopted in accordance with section 6719, a system for the direct funding and support of all Bureau-funded schools. Such system shall allot funds, in accordance with section 6707. Amounts appropriated for distribution under this section may be made available under paragraph (2) or under paragraph (3), as provided in the appropriation Act.

"(2)(A) For the purpose of affording adequate notice of funding available pursuant to the allotments made by section 6707, amounts appropriated in an appropriation Act for any fiscal year shall become available for obligation by the affected schools on July 1 of the fiscal year in which they are appropriated without further action by the Secretary, and shall remain available for obligation through the succeeding fiscal year.

"(B) The Secretary shall, on the basis of the amount appropriated in accordance with this paragraph—

"(i) publish, on July 1 preceding the fiscal year for which the funds are appropriated, allotments to each affected school made under section 6707 of 85 percent of such appropriation; and

"(ii) publish, no later than September 30 of such preceding fiscal year, the allotments to be made under section 6707 of the remaining 15 percent of such appropriation, adjusted to reflect actual student attendance.

"(3) Notwithstanding any law or regulation, the supervisor of a Bureau school may expend an aggregate of no more than $35,000 of the amount allotted the school under section 6707 to acquire supplies and equipment for the school without competitive bidding if—

"(A) the cost for any single item purchased does not exceed $10,000;

"(B) the school board approves the procurement;

"(C) the supervisor certifies that the cost is fair and reasonable;

"(D) the documents relating to the procurement executed by the supervisor or other school staff cite this paragraph as authority for the procurement; and

"(E) the transaction is documented in a journal maintained at the school clearly identifying when the transaction occurred, what was acquired and from whom, the prices paid, the quantities acquired, and any other information the supervisor or school board considers relevant.

The Director shall be responsible for determining the application of this paragraph, including the authorization of specific individuals to carry out this authority, and shall be responsible for the provision of guidelines on the use of this authority and adequate training on such guidelines.

"(4) If a sequestration order issued under the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 reduces the amount of funds available for allotment under section 6707 for any fiscal year by more than 7 percent of the amount of funds available for allotment under such section during the preceding fiscal year—

"(A) the Secretary may, notwithstanding any other provision of law, use—

"(i) funds appropriated for the operation of any Bureau school that is closed or consolidated, and

"(ii) funds appropriated for any program that has been curtailed at any Bureau school, to fund allotments made under section 6707, and

"(B) the Secretary may waive the application of the provisions of section 6701(h) with respect to the closure or consolidation of a school, or the curtailment of a program at a school, during such fiscal year if the funds described in clauses (i) and (ii) of subparagraph (A) with respect to such school are used to fund allotments made under section 6707 for such fiscal year.

"(b) In the case of all Bureau schools, allotted funds shall be expended on the basis of local financial plans which shall be prepared by the local school supervisor in active consultation with the local school board for each school, and the local school board for each school shall have the authority to ratify, reject, or amend such financial plan, and expenditures thereunder, and, on its own determination or in response to the supervisor of the school, to revise such financial plan to meet needs not foreseen at the time of preparation of the financial plan. The supervisor shall provide the appropriate union representative of the education employees with copies of proposed draft financial plans and all amendments or modifications thereto, at the same time they are submitted to the local school board. The supervisor of the school may appeal any such action of the local school board to the appropriate education officer of the Bureau agency by filing a written statement describing the action and the reasons the supervisor believes such action should be overturned. A copy of such statement shall be submitted to the local school board and such board shall be afforded an opportunity to respond, in writing, to such appeal. After reviewing such written appeal and response, the appropriate education officer may, for good cause, overturn the action of the local school board. The appropriate education officer shall transmit the determination of such appeal in the form of a written opinion to such board and to such supervisor identifying the reasons for overturning such action.

"(c) Funds for self-determination grants under section 103(a)(2) of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act shall not be used for providing technical assistance and training in the field of education by the Bureau unless such services are provided in accordance with a plan, agreed to by the tribe or tribes affected and the Bureau, under which control of education programs is intended to be transferred to such tribe or tribes within a specific period of time negotiated under such agreement. The Secretary may approve applications for funding tribal divisions of education and the development of tribal codes of education from funds appropriated pursuant to section 104(a) of such Act.

"(d) In the exercise of its authority under this section, a local school board may request technical assistance and training from the Secretary, and he shall, to the greatest extent possible, provide such services, and make appropriate provisions in the budget of the Office for such services.

"(e)(1) A financial plan under subsection (b) for a school may include, at the discretion of the local administrator and the school board of such school, a provision for a summer program of academic and support services for students of the school. Any such program may include activities related to the prevention of alcohol and substance abuse. The Assistant Secretary of Indian Affairs shall provide for the utilization of any such school facility during any summer in which such utilization is requested.

"(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, funds authorized under the Act of April 16, 1934 (25 U.S.C. 452 et seq.) and the Indian Education Act may be used to augment the services provided in each summer program at the option, and under the control, of the tribe or Indian controlled school receiving such funds.

"(3) The Assistant Secretary of Indian Affairs, acting through the Director of the Office of Indian Education Programs, shall provide technical assistance and coordination for any program described in paragraph (1) and shall, to the extent possible, encourage the coordination of such programs with any other summer programs that might benefit Indian youth, regardless of the funding source or administrative entity of any such program.

"(f)(1) From funds allotted to a Bureau school under section 6707, the Secretary shall, if specifically requested by the tribal governing body (within the meaning of section 6701(k)), implement any cooperative agreement entered into between the tribe, the Bureau school board, and the local public school district which meets the requirements of paragraph (2) and involves the school. The tribe, the Bureau school board, and the local public school district shall determine the terms of the agreement. Such agreement may encompass coordination of all or any part of the following:

"(A) Academic program and curriculum, unless the Bureau school is currently accredited by a State or regional accrediting entity and would not continue to be so accredited.

"(B) Support services, including procurement and facilities maintenance.

"(C) Transportation.

"(2) Each agreement entered into pursuant to the authority provided in paragraph (1) shall confer a benefit upon the Bureau school commensurate with the burden assumed, though this requirement shall not be construed so as to require equal expenditures or an exchange of similar services.

"(g) Any other provision of law notwithstanding, where there is agreement on such action between the superintendent and school board of a B.I.A. funded school, the product or result of a project conducted in whole or in major part by a student may be given to that student upon the completion of said project.

"(h) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, funds received by Bureau funded schools under this title shall not be considered Federal funds for purposes of meeting a match requirement in any Federal program.

"SEC. 6711. POLICY FOR INDIAN CONTROL OF INDIAN EDUCATION.

"(a) It shall be the policy of the the Secretary and the Bureau, in carrying out the functions of the Bureau, to facilitate Indian control of Indian affairs in all matters relating to education.

"(b)(1) All actions under this Act shall be done with active consultation with tribes.

"(2) The consultation required under paragraph (1) means a process involving the open discussion and joint deliberation of all options with respect to potential issues or changes between the Bureau and all interested parties. During such discussions and joint deliberations, interested parties (including, but not limited to, tribes and school officials) shall be given an opportunity to present issues including proposals regarding changes in current practices or programs which will be considered for future action by the Bureau. All interested parties shall be given an opportunity to participate and discuss the options presented or to present other alternatives, with the views and concerns of the interested parties given effect unless the Secretary determines, from information educed or presented by the interested parties during 1 or more of the discussions and deliberations, that there is a substantial reason for another course of action. The Secretary shall submit to any Member of Congress, within 18 days of the receipt of a written request by such Member, a written explanation of any decision made by the Secretary which is not consistent with the views of the interested parties.

"SEC. 6712. EDUCATION PERSONNEL.

"(a)(1) Chapter 51, subchapter III of chapter 53, and chapter 63 of title 5, United States Code, relating to leave, pay, and classification, and the sections relating to the appointment, promotion and removal of civil service employees, shall not apply to educators or to education positions (as defined in subsection (n)).

"(2) Paragraph (1) shall take effect 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act.

"(b) Not later than the effective date of subsection (a)(2), the Secretary shall prescribe regulations to carry out this section. Such regulations shall govern—

"(1) the establishment of education positions,

"(2) the establishment of qualifications for educators,

"(3) the fixing of basic compensation for educators and education positions,

"(4) the appointment of educators,

"(5) the discharge of educators,

"(6) the entitlement of educators to compensation,

"(7) the payment of compensation to educators,

"(8) the conditions of employment of educators,

"(9) the length of the school year applicable to education positions described in subsection (n)(1)(A),

"(10) the leave system for educators, and

"(11) such other matters as may be appropriate.

"(c)(1) In prescribing regulations to govern the qualifications of educators, the Secretary shall require—

"(A)(i) that lists of qualified and interviewed applicants for education positions be maintained in each agency and area office of the Bureau from among individuals who have applied at the agency or area level for an education position or who have applied at the national level and have indicated in such application an interest in working in certain areas or agencies; and

"(ii) that a list of qualified and interviewed applicants for education positions be maintained in the Office from among individuals who have applied at the national level for an education position and who have expressed interest in working in an education position anywhere in the United States;

"(B) that a local school board shall have the authority to waive on a case-by-case basis, any formal education or degree qualifications established by regulation pursuant to subsection (b)(2), in order for a tribal member to be hired in an education position to teach courses on tribal culture and language and that subject to subsection (d)(2)(A), a determination by a school board that such a person be hired shall be followed by the supervisor; and

"(C) that it shall not be a prerequisite to the employment of an individual in an education position at the local level that such individual's name appear on the national list maintained pursuant to subsection (c)(1)(A)(ii) or that such individual has applied at the national level for an education position.

"(2) The Secretary may authorize the temporary employment in an education position of an individual who has not met the certification standards established pursuant to regulations, if the Secretary determines that failure to do so would result in that position remaining vacant.

"(d)(1) In prescribing regulations to govern the appointment of educators, the Secretary shall require—

"TITLE VII—BILINGUAL EDUCATION PROGRAMS

"SEC. 7001. SHORT TITLE.

"This title may be cited as the 'Bilingual Education Act'.

"SEC. 7002. FINDINGS, POLICY, AND PURPOSE.

"(a) Findings.—The Congress finds that—

"(1) language-minority Americans constitute a large and growing proportion of the Nation's population;

"(2) language-minority Americans speak virtually all world languages plus many that are indigenous to the United States;

"(3) the presence of language-minority Americans is related in part to Federal immigration policies;

"(4) many language-minority Americans are limited in their English proficiency, and many have limited education and income;

"(5) limited-English-proficient children and youth, like all other children and youth, have diverse educational needs and strengths and therefore require access to all educational programs and services;

"(6) the Federal Government has a responsibility for the education of American Indians and a special obligation to Native Alaskans, Native Hawaiians and native residents of the territories and freely associated nations to redress the effect of past Federal policies;

"(7) institutions of higher education can assist in preparing teachers, administrators and other school personnel to understand and build upon the educational strengths and needs of language-minority and culturally diverse student enrollments;

"(8) it is the purpose of this title to help ensure that limited-English-proficient students master English and develop high levels of academic attainment in content areas;

"(9) quality bilingual education programs enable children and youth to learn English and meet high academic standards including proficiency in more than one language;

"(10) as the world becomes increasingly interdependent and as international communication becomes a daily occurrence in government, business, commerce, and family life, multilingual skills constitute an important national resource which deserves protection and development;

"(11) educational technology has the potential for improving the education of language-minority and limited-English-proficient students and their families, and the Federal Government should foster this development;

"(12) research, development, implementation and dissemination of effective bilingual education methods, practices, and programs for limited-English-proficient children are essential to systemwide school reform that improves education for all children; and

"(13) a recognized means by which a child learns is through the use of the child's native language, cultural heritage, and instructional programs which use and build upon a child's non-English native language and cultural heritage to promote parent and community involvement in education, student self-esteem, proficiency in English, and subject matter achievement.

"(b) Policy.—The Congress declares it to be the policy of the United States, in order to ensure equal educational opportunity for all children and youth and to promote educational excellence, to assist State and local educational agencies, institutions of higher education, and community-based organizations to build their capacity to establish, implement, and sustain programs of instruction for language minority and limited-English-proficient children and youth.

"(c) Purpose.—The purpose of this title is to educate language minority and limited-English-proficient children and youth to meet the same rigorous standards for academic performance expected of all children and youth, including meeting challenging State performance standards in academic areas by developing—

"(1) systemic improvement and reform of educational programs serving language-minority and limited-English-proficient students through the development and implementation of exemplary bilingual education programs and special alternative instruction programs;

"(2) data collection and dissemination, research, materials development, and technical assistance which is focused on school improvement for language-minority and limited-English-proficient students; and

"(3) programs which strengthen and improve the professional training of educational personnel who work with limited-English-proficient and language-minority students.

"SEC. 7003. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

"(a) In General.—For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this title (except part F), there are authorized to be appropriated $215,000,000 for the fiscal year 1995 and such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1996, 1997, 1998, and 1999.

"(b) Distribution.—From the sums appropriated under subsection (a) for any fiscal year, the Secretary shall reserve at least 25 percent for part C of this title.

"SEC. 7004. DEFINITIONS; REGULATIONS:

"(a) General Rule.—For purposes of this title—

"(1) The term 'native language', when used with reference to an individual, means the language normally used by such individuals, or, in the case of a child, the language normally used by the parents of the child.

"(2) The term 'language-minority' means—

"(A) individuals whose native language is other than English;

"(B) individuals who usually speak a language other than English or come from home environments where a language other than English is usually spoken; or

"(C) American Indians, Alaskan Natives, and Native Hawaiians and native residents of the territories and freely associated nations.

"(3) The term 'limited-English-proficient' means a language-minority person who has difficulty understanding, speaking, reading, or writing the English language at a level appropriate to his or her age and grade and is, thereby, academically disadvantaged in programs conducted exclusively in English.

"(4) The term 'bilingual education' refers to educational programs for limited-English-proficient students which make instructional use of both English and a student's native language. Programs of bilingual education must enable limited-English-proficient students to achieve English proficiency and academic mastery of subject matter content and higher order skills, including critical thinking, so as to meet age-appropriate grade-promotion and graduation standards in concert with national education goals. Bilingual education programs may also develop the native language skills of limited-English-proficient students, or ancestral languages of American Indians, Alaskan Natives, Native Hawaiians and native residents of the territories and freely associated nations. English proficient students may participate in bilingual education programs if the programs are designed to enable all enrolled students to become proficient in English and a second language.

"(5) The term 'special alternative instructional program' refers to educational programs for limited-English-proficient students which utilize specially designed English language curricula and services but do not use the student's native language for instructional purposes. Special alternative instructional programs must enable limited-English-proficient students to achieve English proficiency and academic mastery of subject matter content and higher order skills, including critical thinking so as to meet age-appropriate grade-promotion and graduation standards in concert with national education goals. Special alternative instructional programs are suitable for schools where the diversity of the limited-English-proficient students' native languages and the small number of students speaking each respective language makes bilingual education impractical and where there is a critical shortage of bilingual education teachers.

"(6) The term 'family education programs' refers to bilingual education or special alternative instructional programs designed to help limited-English-proficient adults and out-of-school youths achieve proficiency in the English language and to provide instruction on how parents and family members can facilitate the educational achievement of their children. When feasible, instructional programs such as the model developed under the Even Start Literacy Programs that promote adult literacy and train parents to support the educational growth of their children shall be developed. Programs shall give preference to participation by parents and immediate family members of children attending school. Family education programs may also provide instruction to facilitate higher education and employment outcomes.

"(7) The term 'institution of higher education' has the meaning given such term in section 1201(a) of the Higher Education Act of 1965.

"(8) The term 'Office' means the Office of Bilingual Education and Minority Languages Affairs.

"(9) The term 'community college' has the meaning given such term in section 1201(a) of the Higher Education Act of 1965 for an institution which provides not less than a 2-year program which is acceptable for full credit toward a bachelor's degree, including institutions receiving assistance under the Tribally Controlled Community College Assistance Act of 1978.

"(10) The term 'paraprofessional' means an individual who is employed in preschool or elementary or secondary school under the supervision of a certified or licensed teacher, including individuals employed in bilingual education, special education and migrant education.

"(11) The term 'other programs for persons of limited-English-proficiency' means any programs administered by the Secretary that serve persons of limited-English-proficiency.

"(12) The term 'community-based organization' means a private nonprofit organization or Indian tribe or tribally sanctioned educational authority which is representative of a community or significant segments of a community and which provides educational or related services to individuals in the community. The term 'community-based organization' includes Native Hawaiian organizations (including Native Hawaiian education organizations) as defined in section 4009 of Public Law 100-297).

"(13) The term 'children and youth' means individuals aged 3 through 21.

"(14) The term 'immigrant children and youth' means individuals who—

"(A) are aged 3 through 21;

"(B) were not born in any State; and

"(C) have not been attending 1 or more schools in any 1 or more States for more than 2 full academic years.

"(b) REGULATION RULE.—In developing regulations under this title, the Secretary shall consult with State and local educational agencies, organizations representing limited-English-proficient individuals, and organizations representing teachers and other personnel involved in bilingual education.

"(c) PARENTAL NOTIFICATION.—Parents of children and youth participating in programs assisted under this title shall be informed of—

"(1) a student's level of English proficiency, how it was assessed, the status of a student's academic achievement and the implications of a student's educational strengths and needs for age and grade appropriate academic attainment, promotion, and graduation;

"(2) what programs are available to meet the student's educational strengths and needs and how the programs differ in content and instructional goals, and in the case of a disabled student, how the program meets the objectives of a student's individualized education program;

"(3) the instructional goals of the bilingual education or special alternative instructional program, and how the program will specifically help the limited-English-proficient student acquire English and meet age-appropriate standards for grade-promotion and graduation, including—

"(A) the benefits and nature of the bilingual educational program and of the instructional alternatives; and

"(B) the reasons for the selection of their child as being in need of bilingual education.

"(4)(A) Parents shall also be informed that they have the option of declining enrollment of their children and youth in such programs and shall be given an opportunity to do so if they so choose.

"(B) Local educational agencies are not relieved of any of their obligations under title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 because parents choose not to enroll their children in bilingual education programs.

"(5) Parents must receive, in a manner and form understandable to them, including, if necessary and to the extent feasible, in their native language, the information required by this subsection. At a minimum, parents must receive—

"(A) timely information about projects funded under this part; and

"(B) if the parents of participating children so desire, notice of opportunities for regular meetings for the purpose of formulating and responding to recommendations from such parents.

"(6) no action may involve the admission or exclusion of students to or from any federally assisted education program merely on the basis of the surnames or language-minority status of such students.

"SEC. 7005. INDIAN AND ALASKAN NATIVE CHILDREN IN SCHOOLS.

"(a) ELIGIBLE ENTITIES.—For the purpose of carrying out programs under this title for individuals served by elementary, secondary, or postsecondary schools operated predominately for Indian or Alaska Native children and youth, an Indian tribe, a tribally sanctioned educational authority, or an elementary or secondary school that is operated or funded by the Bureau of Indian Affairs shall be considered to be a local educational agency as such term is used in this title, subject to the following qualifications:

If the State educational agency of a State submits written comments on any application, it must submit written comment on all applications within that same grant category from within that State. The Secretary shall take comments into consideration when funding applications under this part.

"(b) REQUIRED DOCUMENTATION.—Such application shall include documentation that the applicant has the qualified personnel required to develop, administer, and implement the proposed program.

"(c) CONTENTS.—(1) An application for a grant under this part shall contain the following:

"(A) A description of the need for the proposed program, including data on the number of children and youth of limited-English-proficiency in the school or district to be served and their characteristics, such as language spoken, dropout rates, proficiency in English and the native language, academic standing in relation to their English proficient peers, and, where applicable, the recency of immigration.

"(d) APPROVAL OF APPLICATIONS.—An application for a grant under this part may be approved only if the Secretary determines that—

"(1) the program will use qualified personnel, including those personnel who are proficient in the language or languages used for instruction;

"(2) in designing the program for which application is made, the needs of children in nonprofit private elementary and secondary schools have been taken into account through consultation with appropriate private school officials and, consistent with the number of such children enrolled in such schools in the area to be served whose educational needs are of the type and whose language and grade levels are of a similar type that the program is intended to address, after consultation with appropriate private school officials, provision has been made for the participation of such children on a basis comparable to that provided for public school children;

"(3) student evaluation and assessment procedures in the program are valid, reliable, and fair for limited-English-proficient students, and that limited-English-proficient students who are disabled are identified and served in accordance with the requirements of the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act;

"(4) Federal funds made available for the project or activity will be used so as to supplement the level of State and local funds that, in the absence of such Federal funds, would have been expended for special programs for children of limited-English-proficient individuals and in no case to supplant such State and local funds, except that nothing in this paragraph shall preclude a local educational agency from using funds under this title for activities carried out under an order of a court of the United States or of any State respecting services to be provided such children, or to carry out a plan approved by the Secretary as adequate under title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 with respect to services to be provided such children;

"(5) the assistance provided under the application will contribute toward building the capacity of the applicant to provide a program on a regular basis, similar to that proposed for assistance, which will be of sufficient size, scope, and quality to promise significant improvement in the education of students of limited-English-proficiency, and that the applicant will have the resources and commitment to continue the program when assistance under this title is reduced or no longer available;

"(e) SPECIAL CONSIDERATION AND PRIORITIES.—

"(1) Students may participate in any program receiving funds under this part for the duration of the program.

"(2) The Secretary shall give priority to applications which provide for the development of bilingual proficiency for all participating students.

"(3) Grants for special alternative instructional programs shall not exceed 25 percent of the funds provided for any type of grant under any section or of total funds provided under this part.

"(4) Notwithstanding paragraph (3), the Secretary may award grants for special alternative instructional programs if an applicant has demonstrated that they cannot develop and implement a bilingual education program for the following reasons:

"(A) Where the diversity of the limited-English proficient students' native languages and the small number of students speaking each respective language makes bilingual education impractical.

"(B) Where, despite documented convincing efforts, the applicant has not been able to hire instructional personnel who are able to communicate in the students' native language.

"(5) In approving applications under this part, the Secretary shall give consideration to the degree to which the program for which assistance is sought involves the collaborative efforts of institutions of higher education, community-based organizations, the appropriate local and State educational agency, or business.

"(6) The Secretary shall ensure that projects funded under this part address the full needs of school systems of all sizes and geographical areas, including rural schools.

"(7) The Secretary shall give priority to applications providing training for personnel participating in or preparing to participate in the program which will assist them in meeting State and local certification requirements and that, to the extent possible, college or university credit will be awarded for such training.

"SEC. 7107. INTENSIFIED INSTRUCTION.

"In carrying out this part, each grant recipient may intensify instruction for limited-English-proficient students by—

"(1) expanding the educational calendar of the school in which such student is enrolled to include programs before and after school and during the summer months;

"(2) expanding the use of professional and volunteer aids;

"(3) applying technology to the course of instruction; and

"(4) providing intensified instruction through supplementary instruction or activities, including educationally enriching extracurricular activities, during times when school is not routinely in session.

"SEC. 7109. SUBGRANTS.

"A local educational agency that receives a grant under this part may, with the approval of the Secretary, make a subgrant to, or enter into a contract with, an institution of higher education, a non-profit organization, or a consortium of such entities to carry out an approved program, including a program to serve out-of-school youth.

"Programs authorized under this title in the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico may, notwithstanding any other provision of this title, include programs of instruction, teacher training, curriculum development, evaluation, and testing designed for children and youth of limited-Spanish proficiency.

"SEC. 7112. EVALUATIONS.

"(a) EVALUATION.—Each recipient of funds under this part shall provide the Secretary with an evaluation, in the form prescribed by the Secretary, of its program every two years.

"(b) USE OF EVALUATION.—Such evaluation shall be used by a grantee—

"TITLE VIII—IMPACT AID

"SEC. 8001. FINDINGS.

"The Congress finds that—

"(1) certain activities of the Federal Government place a financial burden on the local educational agencies serving areas where such activities are carried out; and

"(2) it is the shared responsibility of the Federal Government, the States, and local educational agencies to provide for the education of children connected to those activities.

"SEC. 8002. PURPOSE.

"In order to fulfill the Federal responsibility to assist with the provision of educational services to federally connected children, and to help them meet challenging State standards, it is the purpose of this title to provide financial assistance to local educational agencies that—

"(1) experience a substantial and continuing financial burden due to the acquisition of real property by the United States;

"(2) educate children who reside on Federal property and whose parents are employed on Federal property;

"(3) educate children of parents who are in the military services and children who live in low-rent housing;

"(4) experience sudden and substantial increases in enrollments because of military realignments; or

"(5) need special assistance with capital expenditures for construction activities because of the enrollments of substantial numbers of children who reside on Indian lands.

"SEC. 8003. PAYMENTS RELATING TO FEDERAL ACQUISITION OF REAL PROPERTY.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—Where the Secretary, after consultation with any local educational agency and with the appropriate State educational agency, determines for a fiscal year ending prior to October 1, 1999—

"(1) that the United States owns Federal property in the local educational agency, and that such property—

"(A) has been acquired by the United States since 1938;

"(B) was not acquired by exchange for other Federal property in the local educational agency which the United States owned before 1939; and

"(C) had an assessed value (determined as of the time or times when so acquired) aggregating 10 percent or more of the assessed value of all real property in the local educational agency (similarly determined as of the time or times when such Federal property was so acquired); and

"(2) that such agency is not being substantially compensated for the loss in revenue resulting from such ownership by increases in revenue accruing to the agency from the conduct of Federal activities with respect to such Federal property, then such agency shall be paid the amount described in subsection (b).

"(b) AMOUNT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—(A) The amount that a local educational agency shall be paid under subsection (a) for a fiscal year shall be calculated in accordance with paragraph (2), except that such amount shall be reduced by the Secretary by an amount equal to the amount of revenue, if any, that such agency received from activities conducted on such property during the previous fiscal year.

"(B) If funds appropriated under section 8014(a) are insufficient to pay the amount determined under subparagraph (A), the Secretary shall ratably reduce the payment to each eligible local educational agency.

"(C) Notwithstanding any other provision of this subsection, a local educational agency may not be paid an amount under this section which exceeds the difference of—

"(i) the maximum amount that such agency is eligible to receive for such fiscal year under section 8004(b)(1)(C); and

"(ii) the amount that such agency receives in such fiscal year under section 8004(b)(2).

"(3) DETERMINATION OF AGGREGATE ASSESSED VALUE.—Such aggregate assessed value of such acquired Federal property shall be determined (on the basis of the highest and best use of property adjacent to such acquired Federal property as of the time such value is determined), and provided to the Secretary, by the local official responsible for assessing the value of real property located in the jurisdiction of such local educational agency for the purpose of levying a property tax.

"(c) APPLICABILITY TO TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY ACT.—For the purposes of this section, any real property with respect to which payments are being made under section 13 of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933 shall not be regarded as Federal property.

"(A) restricts some or any construction on such property;

"(B) requires that the property be used in perpetuity for the public purposes for which it was conveyed;

"(C) requires the grantee of the property to report to the Federal government (or its agent) containing information on the use of the property;

"(D) except with the approval of the Federal government (or its agent), prohibits the sale, lease, assignment, or other disposal of the property unless such sale, lease, assignment, or other disposal is to another eligible government agency; and

"(E) reserves to the Federal government a right of reversion at any time the Federal government (or its agent) deems it necessary for the national defense.

"(B) Multiply the number of children described in paragraph (1)(C) by a factor of 1.25.

"(A) IN GENERAL.—For any fiscal year in which the sums appropriated under section 8014(b) are insufficient to pay to each local educational agency the full amount computed under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall make payments based upon the provisions of this paragraph.

"(B) LEARNING OPPORTUNITY THRESHOLD PAYMENTS.—(i) For fiscal years described in subparagraph (A), the Secretary shall compute a learning opportunity threshold payment (hereinafter 'threshold payment') by multiplying the amount obtained under paragraph (1)(C) by the total percentage obtained by adding—

"(I) the percentage of federally connected children for each local educational agency determined by calculating the fraction, the numerator of which is the total number of children described under subsection (a)(1) and the denominator of which is the total number of children in average daily attendance at the schools served by such agency; and

"(II) the percentage that funds under this paragraph represent of the total budget of the local educational agency, determined by calculating the fraction, the numerator of which is the total amount of funds calculated for each educational agency under this paragraph (not including amounts received under subsection (f)), and the denominator of which is the total current expenditures for such agency.

"(ii) Such total percentage used to calculate threshold payments under paragraph (1) shall not exceed 100.

"(C) RATABLE DISTRIBUTION.—For fiscal years described in subparagraph (A), the Secretary shall make payments as a ratable distribution based upon the computation made under subparagraph (B).

"(A) the eligibility of a local educational agency for State aid for free public education; or

"(B) the amount of such aid; or

"(2) make such aid available to local educational agencies in a manner that results in less State aid to any local educational agency that is eligible for such payment than it would receive if it were not so eligible.

"(b) State Equalization Plans.—

"(1) In general.—A State may reduce State aid to a local educational agency that receives a payment under sections 8003 and 8004(a) (except the amount calculated in excess of 1.0 under subparagraph (B) of subsection (a)(2)) or under the Act of September 30, 1950 (Public Law 874, 81st Congress) as such Act existed prior to the enactment of the Improving America's Schools Act of 1994 (other than an increase in payments described in paragraphs (2)(B), (2)(C), (2)(D), or (3)(B)(ii) of section 3(d) of such Act of September 30, 1950) for any fiscal year if the Secretary determines, and certifies under subsection (c)(3)(A), that such State has in effect a program of State aid that equalizes expenditures for free public education among local educational agencies in such State.

"(2) Computation.—

"(A) In general.—For purposes of paragraph (1), a program of State aid equalizes expenditures among local educational agencies if, in the second preceding fiscal year, the amount of per-pupil expenditures made by, or per-pupil revenues available to, the local educational agency in the State with the highest such per-pupil expenditures or revenues did not exceed the amount of such per-pupil expenditures made by, or per-pupil revenues available to, the local educational agency in the State with the lowest such expenditures or revenues by more than 10 percent.

"(B) Other factors.—In making a determination under this subsection, the Secretary shall—

"(i) disregard local educational agencies with per-pupil expenditures or revenues above the 95th percentile or below the 5th percentile of such expenditures or revenues in the State; and

"(ii) take into account the extent to which a program of State aid reflects the additional cost of providing free public education in particular types of local educational agencies, such as those that are geographically isolated, or to particular types of students, such as children with disabilities.

"(3) Exception.—Notwithstanding paragraph (2), if the Secretary determines that the State has substantially revised its program of State aid, the Secretary may certify such program for any fiscal year only if—

"(A) the Secretary determines, on the basis of projected data, that the State's program will meet the 10 percent disparity standard described in paragraph (2) in that fiscal year; and

"(B) the State provides an assurance to the Secretary that, if final data do not demonstrate that the State's program met such standard for that year (or that it met such standard with a greater percentage of disparity than anticipated), the State will pay to each affected local educational agency the amount by which it reduced State aid to the local educational agency on the basis of such certification, or a proportionate share thereof, as the case may be.

"(c) Procedures For Review of State Equalization Plans.—

"(1) Written notice.—

"TITLE X—COORDINATED SERVICES PROJECTS

"SEC. 10001. FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

"(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress makes the following findings:

"(1) Growing numbers of children are negatively affected by influences outside of the classroom which increase their risk of academic failure.

"(2) Factors such as poor nutrition, unsafe living conditions, physical and sexual abuse, family and gang violence, inadequate health care, unemployment, lack of child care and substance abuse adversely affect family relationships and the ability of a child to learn.

"(3) Parents and other caregivers in today's high pressure society often face demands which place restraints on their time and affect their ability to adequately provide for the needs of their families.

"(4) Access to health and social service programs can address the basic physical and emotional needs of children so that they can fully participate in the learning experiences offered them in school.

"(5) Services for at-risk students need to be more convenient, less fragmented, regulated and duplicative in order to meet the needs of children and their families.

"(6) School personnel, parents, and support service providers often lack knowledge of, and access to, available services for at-risk students and their families in the community, and have few resources to coordinate services and make them accessible.

"(7) Service providers, such as teachers, social workers, health care and child care providers, juvenile justice workers and others, are often trained in separate disciplines that provide little support for the coordination of services.

"(8) Coordination of services is more cost effective because it substitutes prevention for expensive crisis intervention.

"(9) Coordinating health and social services with education can help the Nation meet the National Education Goals by ensuring better outcomes for children.

"(b) PURPOSE OF COORDINATING SERVICES.—The purpose of this section is to provide elementary and secondary school students and their families better access to the social, health and education services necessary for students to succeed in school and for their families to take an active role in ensuring that children receive the best possible education.

"SEC. 10002. DEFINITIONS.

"(a) The term 'coordinated services project' refers to a comprehensive approach to meeting the educational, health, social service, and other needs of children and their families, including foster children and their foster families, through a communitywide partnership that links public and private agencies providing such services or access to such services through a coordination site at or near a school.

"(b) An 'eligible entity' is a local educational agency, individual school, or consortium of schools.

"SEC. 10003. PROJECT DEVELOPMENT AND IMPLEMENTATION.

"(a) PROJECT PLANS.—Eligible entities exercising their authority under section 9206(b) shall submit to the Secretary an application for the development of a plan or a plan for the implementation of a coordinated services project.

"(b) PROJECT DEVELOPMENT.—The application for the development of the coordinated services project, which can last for up to one year, shall:

"(1) demonstrate that an assessment will be performed of the economic, social, and health barriers to educational achievement experienced by children and families, including foster children and their foster families, in the community, and the local, State, federal, and privately funded services available to meet such needs;

"(2) identify the measures that will be taken to establish a communitywide partnership that links public and private agencies providing services to children and families; and

"(3) identify any other measures that will be taken to develop a comprehensive plan for the implementation of a coordinated services project or projects.

"(c) PROJECT IMPLEMENTATION.—Eligible entities shall submit to the Secretary a plan for the implementation or expansion of a coordinated services project. Such plan shall include—

"(1) the results of a children and families needs assessment, which will include an assessment of the needs of foster children;

"(2) the membership of the coordinated services project partnership;

"(3) a description of the proposed coordinated services project, its objectives, where it will be located, and the staff that will be used to carry out the purposes of the project;

"(4) a description of how the success of the coordinated services project will be evaluated;

"(5) a description of the training to be provided to teachers and appropriate personnel; and

"(6) information regarding whether or not a sliding scale fee for services will be employed, and if not, an explanation of why such scale is not feasible.

"SEC. 10004. USES OF FUNDS.

"(a) Funds utilized under the authority of section 9206(b) may be used for activities under this title which include—

"(1) hiring a services coordinator;

"(2) making minor renovations to existing buildings;

"(3) purchasing basic operating equipment;

"(4) improving communications and information-sharing between members of the coordinated services project partnership;

"(5) providing training to teachers and appropriate personnel concerning their role in a coordinated services project; and

"(6) conducting the needs assessment required in section 10003(b)(1).

"(b) Projects operating under the authority of this title shall comply with the requirements of section 1121(b).

"SEC. 10005. CONTINUING AUTHORITY.

"The Secretary shall not approve the plan of any project which fails to demonstrate that it is achieving effective coordination after 2 years of implementation.

"SEC. 10006. FEDERAL AGENCY COORDINATION.

"(a) AGENCY COORDINATION.—The Secretaries of Education, Health and Human Services, Labor, Housing and Urban Development, Treasury, and Agriculture, and the Attorney General shall review the programs administered by their agencies to identify barriers to service coordination.

"(b) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—Such Secretaries and the Attorney General shall submit jointly a report to the Congress not later than 2 years after the date of the enactment of the Improving America's Schools Act, based on the review required under paragraph (a) recommending legislative and regulatory action to address such barriers, and during this time, shall use waiver authorities authorized under this and other Acts.

"SEC. 10007. LIMITATION ON USE OF FUNDS FOR COORDINATION OF SERVICES.

PART C—IMPACT AID STATUTES

SEC. 331. AMENDMENTS TO PUBLIC LAW 815.

"SEC. 2. PORTION OF APPROPRIATIONS AVAILABLE FOR PAYMENTS.

"For each fiscal year the Secretary shall distribute the funds appropriated in accordance with section 1 which shall be available for carrying out the provisions of sections 5, 9, 10, and 14. The funds provided under section 1 for the schools serving military dependents and Indian lands shall be divided equally between section 5 and section 14 of this Act. Funds provided under section 5 of this Act shall be divided equally between the priority categories of section 1(a)(1) and 1(a)(2) of this Act.".

"SEC. 3. ESTABLISHMENT OF PRIORITIES.

"Applications for construction or modification projects provided for under this Act must be filed by June 30 of the fiscal year prior to the year in which funds are first requested. The Secretary shall use the following order of priority in approving applications under section 5 and funded in accordance with section 1(a)(1) and section 1(a)(2) of this Act. The priority of payment of application under section 1(a)(1) shall be based on the highest percentage of number of children in need of minimum school facilities. The priority of payment of applications under section 1(a)(2) shall be based on the highest percentage of federally connected students eligible for payment. The Secretary shall use the priorities stated in this section in approving applications in the event the funds appropriated under section 1 of this title and remaining available on any such date for payment to local educational agencies are less than the Federal share of the cost of the projects with respect to which applications have been filed prior to such date (and for which funds under section 1 have not already been obligated). Only applications meeting the conditions for approval under this Act (other than section 6(b)(2)(C)) shall be considered applications for purposes of the preceding sentence. Such order of priority shall provide that applications payments based upon increases in the number of children residing on, or residing with a parent employed on property which is party of a low-rent housing project assisted under the United States Housing Act of 1937 shall not be approved for any fiscal year until all other applications under paragraph (2) of subsection (a) of section 5 have been approved for the fiscal year.".

(c) SECTION 5.—Section 5 of such Act (20 U.S.C. 635) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. LIMITATION ON TOTAL PAYMENTS TO ANY LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCY.

"(a) Subject to the limitations in subsection (c) the total of the payments to a local educational agency under this Act may not exceed the sum of—

"(1) the estimated increase, since the base year, in the number of children determined with respect to such agency who live on Federal property and have a parent who works on Federal property multiplied by 100 percent of the average per pupil cost of constructing minimum school facilities in the State in which the school district of such agency is situated;

"(2) the estimated increase, since the base year, in the number of children determined with respect to such agency who have a parent who lives on or works on Federal property multiplied by 50 percent of such cost;

"(3) In computing for any local educational agency the number of children in an increase under paragraph (1) or (2), the estimated number of children described in such paragraph who will be in the membership of the schools of such agency at the close of the increase period shall be compared with the estimated number of such children in average daily membership of the schools of such agency during the base year. However, the base year average daily membership shall be adjusted to exclude the number of children that formed the basis for previous payments on applications approved 30 or more years prior to the close of the increased period for the current application.

"(b) If two of the paragraphs of subsection (a) apply to a child, the local educational agency shall elect which of such paragraphs shall apply to such child, except that, notwithstanding the election of a local educational agency to have paragraph (2) apply to a child instead of paragraph (1), the determination of the maximum amount for such agency under subsection (a) shall be made without regard to such election.

"(c) A local educational agency shall not be eligible to have any amount included in its maximum by reason of paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) of subsection (a) unless the increase in children referred to in such paragraph is at least 20, and in the case of paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) of subsection (a), is—

"(1) equal to at least 6 percent of the number of federally connected children who were in the average daily membership of the schools of such agency during the base year, or whichever is the lesser.

"(2) at least 750,

"(d) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (c) of this section, whenever and to the extent that, in his judgment, exceptional circumstances exist which make such action necessary to avoid inequity and avoid defeating the purposes of the Act, the Secretary may waive or reduce the minimum number requirement or any percentage requirement or requirements in subsection (c).

"(e) In determining under this section the total of the payments which may be made to a local educational agency on the basis of any application, the total number of children counted for purposes of paragraph (1) or (2), as the case may be, of subsection (a) may not exceed—

"(1) the number of children whose membership at the close of the increase period for the application is compared with average daily membership in the base period for purposes of that paragraph, provided that the base year average daily membership does not include any children which formed the basis of payment in the applications approved 30 or more years ago, minus

"(2) the number of such children whose membership at the close of the increase period was compared with membership in the base year for purposes of such paragraph under the last previous application, provided the application was funded within the last 4 years, if any, of the agency on the basis of which any payments have been or may be made to that agency.".

"(d) If the application has not been funded within the 3-year period, the local educational agency must recertify their need to have the application remain active.".

"(2) If additional funds become available for making payments under sections 1123 and 1124 for such fiscal year, allocations that were reduced under paragraph (1) shall be increased on the same basis as they were reduced.

"(b) GRANTS FOR COUNTIES, THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, AND PUERTO RICO.—(1) The amount of the grant that a county in a State or that the District of Columbia is eligible to receive under this section for any fiscal year shall be the product of—

"(A) the number of children counted under subsection (c); and

"(B) 40 percent of the average per-pupil expenditure in the State, except that such percentage shall not be less than 32 percent nor more than 48 percent of the average per-pupil expenditure in the United States.

"(2) For each fiscal year, the amount of the grant for which the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico is eligible under this section shall be equal to—

"(A) the number of children counted under subsection (c) for Puerto Rico, multiplied by the product of—

"(B)(i) the percentage that the average per-pupil expenditure in Puerto Rico is of the lowest average per-pupil expenditure of any of the 50 States; and

"(ii) 32 percent of the average per-pupil expenditure in the United States.

"(c) CHILDREN TO BE COUNTED.—

"(1) CATEGORIES OF CHILDREN.—The number of children to be counted for purposes of this section shall be—

"(ii) In making such determinations, the Secretary shall use the criteria of poverty used by the Bureau of the Census in compiling the most recent decennial census.

"(B)(i) The Secretary shall determine the number of children described in paragraph (1)(A)(ii) on the basis of the number of such children from families receiving an annual income, in excess of the current criteria of poverty, from payments under the program of aid to families with dependent children under a State plan approved under title IV of the Social Security Act.

"(ii) In making such determinations, the Secretary shall use the criteria of poverty used by the Bureau of the Census in compiling the most recent decennial census, for a family of four, in such form as those criteria have been updated to reflect increases in the Consumer Price Index.

"(C) The Secretary shall determine the number of children described in paragraph (1)(A) (ii) and (iii) on the basis of—

"(i) caseload data for the month of October of the preceding fiscal year, using, in the case of children described in paragraph (1)(A)(ii), the criteria of poverty and the form of such criteria that were determined for the calendar year preceding such month of October; or

"(ii) to the extent that such data are not available to the Secretary by January 1 of the calendar year in which the Secretary's determination is made, on the basis of the most recent reliable data available to the Secretary at the time of such determination.

"(D) For purposes of this subsection, the Secretary shall consider all children who are in correctional institutions to be living in institutions for delinquent children.

"(E) The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall collect and transmit information on the number of children described in paragraph (1)(A)(ii) and the number of foster children described in paragraph (1)(A)(iii) to the Secretary by January 1 of each year.

"(A) the total number of children aged five through 17 in the local educational agency—

"(i) in local institutions for neglected or delinquent children; and

"(ii) from low-income families, as determined under paragraph (2); less

"(B) two percent of the total number of children aged five through 17 in the local educational agency.

"(2) The State educational agency shall determine the number of children from low-income families in local educational agencies—

"(A) based on the best data available on a Statewide basis; and

"(B) using the same measure of low income throughout the State.

"(3) The State educational agency shall distribute funds under this section to each local educational agency in proportion to the number of children counted under paragraph (1) in the local educational agency compared to the number of such children in all local educational agencies in the county.

"SEC. 1124. CONCENTRATION GRANTS.

"(a) Eligibility of Counties.—Except as otherwise provided in this section, a county in a State is eligible for a grant under this section if—

"(1) the number of children counted under section 1123(c)(1)(A) in the county is more than 6,500; or

"(2) the percentage of children counted under such section is greater than 18 percent of the total number of children aged five through 17 in the county.

"(b) Grants for Counties, the District of Columbia, and Puerto Rico.—(1) The amount of the grant that a county in a State or that the District of Columbia or Puerto Rico is eligible to receive under this section for any fiscal year is the product of—

"(A) the number of children counted under section 1123(c)(1)(A), minus two percent of the total number of children aged five through 17 in the county; and

"(B) the per-pupil amount determined under section 1123(b) for the fiscal year for which the determination is being made for that county.

"(c) Local Educational Agency Allocations.—(1)(A) From funds remaining after the State educational agency reserves any funds under section 1601(c), and except as otherwise provided in this subsection and in section 1125(d), funds allocated to counties under this section shall be allocated by the State educational agency only to those local educational agencies whose school districts lie, in whole or in part, within the county and that are determined by the State educational agency to meet either of the eligibility criteria in subsection (a).

"(B) Such determinations shall be made on the basis of the same poverty data used by the State educational agency under section 1123(d). If the State educational agency does not use census poverty data to determine eligibility, it must equate the poverty measure it uses to the latest available census data in order that eligibility is not affected by differences in sources of poverty data.

"(C) The State educational agency shall distribute funds under this section to each local educational agency that is eligible to receive those funds in proportion to the number of children counted under section 1123(d) in each local educational agency compared to the number of such children in all local educational agencies that are eligible for concentration grants in the county.

"(2)(A) In counties where no local educational agency meets either of the criteria in subsection (a), the State educational agency shall allocate such funds among the local educational agencies within such counties, in whole or in part, based on their respective concentrations and numbers of children counted under section 1123(d).

"(B) Only local educational agencies with concentrations of poverty that exceed the countywide average percentage of children counted under section 1123(d) or the countywide average number of such children may receive any funds on the basis of this paragraph.

"(3) In States that receive the minimum grant under section 1122(d), the State educational agency shall allocate such funds among the local educational agencies in such State either—

"(A) in accordance with paragraphs (1) and (2) of this subsection and section 1125(d); or

"(B) without regard to the counties in which such local educational agencies are located, based on their respective concentrations and numbers of children counted under section 1123(d), except that only those local educational agencies with concentrations of children counted under section 1123(d) that exceed the Statewide average percentage of such children or the Statewide average number of such children shall receive any funds on the basis of this subparagraph.

"(4) A State educational agency may reserve not more than ten percent of its allocation under this section to make direct payments to local educational agencies that meet either of the criteria in subsection (a), but are in ineligible counties.

"SEC. 1125. SPECIAL ALLOCATION PROCEDURES.

"(a) Hold-Harmless Amounts.—The total amount made available to each local educational agency under sections 1123 and 1124 for any fiscal year shall be at least 85 percent of the total amount such agency received under such sections (or, for fiscal year 1995, under their predecessor authorities) for the preceding fiscal year.

"(b) Allocations for Neglected or Delinquent Children.—(1) If a State educational agency determines that a local educational agency in the State is unable or unwilling to provide for the special educational needs of children who are living in institutions for neglected or delinquent children as described in section 1123(c)(1)(A)(ii), the State educational agency shall, if it assumes responsibility for the special educational needs of such children, receive the portion of such local educational agency's allocation under sections 1123 and 1124 that is attributable to such children.

"(2) If the State educational agency does not assume such responsibility, any other State or local public agency that does assume such responsibility shall receive that portion of the local educational agency's allocation.

"(c) Allocations Among Local Educational Agencies.—The State educational agency may allocate the amounts of grants under sections 1123 and 1124 between and among the affected local educational agencies when—

"(1) two or more local educational agencies serve, in whole or in part, the same geographical area; or

"(2) a local educational agency provides free public education for children who reside in the school district of another local educational agency.

"(d) Allocations Without Regard to Counties.—A State educational agency may allocate funds under sections 1123 and 1124 directly to eligible local educational agencies without regard to counties if the State educational agency can demonstrate to the Secretary's satisfaction that doing so will result in a reasonable allocation of those funds.

"(e) Reallocation.—If a State educational agency determines that the amount of a grant a local educational agency would receive under sections 1123 and 1124 is more than such local agency will use, the State educational agency shall make the excess amount available to other local educational agencies in the State that need additional funds in accordance with criteria established by the State educational agency.

"SEC. 1126. CARRYOVER AND WAIVERS.

"(a) Limitation on Carryover.—Notwithstanding section 412 of the General Education Provisions Act or any other provision of law, not more than 15 percent of the funds allocated to a local educational agency for any fiscal year under this subpart (but not including funds received through any reallocation under this subpart) may remain available for obligation by such agency for one additional fiscal year.

"(b) Waiver.—A State educational agency may, once every three years, waive the percentage limitation in subsection (a) if—

"(1) the agency determines that the request of a local educational agency is reasonable and necessary; or

"(2) supplemental appropriations for this subpart become available.

"(c) Exclusion.—The percentage limitation under subsection (a) shall not apply to any local educational agency that receives less than $50,000 under this subpart for any fiscal year.".

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

THE PRESIDENT'S 1995 BUDGET

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert my Washington Report for Wednesday, February 16, 1994 into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

THE PRESIDENT'S 1995 BUDGET

Last week President Clinton submitted to Congress his 1995 budget. It makes only fairly modest shifts in priorities, and includes no bold innovation. It reflects the constraints of two big deficit reduction agreements in recent years, and combines spending cuts in many programs and elimination of others, with modest new initiatives to promote technology and education, and to fight crime.

MAJOR THEMES

President Clinton proposes spending $1.52 trillion in 1995, up from $1.48 trillion this year. As in past years, the biggest spending increases are for Social Security (up $17 billion), Medicare and Medicaid (up $22 billion), and interest on the national debt (up $10 billion). Spending on these three areas now comprises 51% of total federal spending, and without the increases in these three areas, overall federal spending would actually drop next year.

The other major category of federal spending, national defense, would decline by $9 billion under the Clinton plan. Some 17% of total federal spending goes to defense.

Everything else the federal government does makes up the remaining 32% of total federal spending. Under the Clinton budget, spending in this category would basically remain unchanged from the 1994 level. The President would, however, shift around some spending. He would eliminate 115 programs, cut spending for more than 200 others, and reduce the federal workforce in order to increase spending for his investment agenda. Savings from energy programs, foreign aid, and farm programs, for example, would be used to fund science and technology, infrastructure, education, job training, environmental protection, and anti-crime efforts.

The President's budget proposes $1.35 trillion in revenues, up from $1.25 trillion this year. Most of the increased revenue results from the strengthening economy.

The President estimates that the 1995 deficit will be $176 billion, down from $255 billion in 1993 and an expected $235 billion this year. the deficit would be at its lowest level since 1985.

The modest economic assumptions underlying the budget seem in line with private forecasts. The budget assumes 3.0% economic growth in 1994 declining to 2.7% next year, inflation rising from 3.0% to 3.2%, and unemployment dropping from 6.4% to 6.0%.

The budget reflects the major Clinton themes—cutting the deficit and increasing investment on programs intended to boost U.S. productivity. The budget leaves out several important items, including the cost of welfare reform and implementation of the worldwide trade agreement.

MAJOR BUDGET ISSUES BEFORE CONGRESS

It is my sense that Congress will generally be comfortable with the broad outlines of the Clinton budget. Yet several major budget questions will have to be considered by Congress this year.

How much to provide for new investment? The Clinton emphasis on shifting a greater share of federal spending to productivity-enhancing investment and away from consumption is a good one. Greater investments in public infrastructure, education and training, science and technology, and programs for children are central to a growing economy that produces good jobs and is internationally competitive. Yet, since 1980 the share of total federal spending going to nondefense investment has decreased sharply from 16% to 9%.

The President's investment agenda halts that decline and increases it slightly. Yet funding these investments will not be easy. Tight caps on discretionary spending will make these investments difficult without offsetting cuts in other programs. And some of the cuts the President has proposed, such as cuts in mass transit operating subsidies and in low-income energy assistance, will have difficulty getting through Congress.

How much to reduce the deficit? The President and Congress gave top priority last year to reducing the deficit, and that has clearly paid dividends. The lower deficit has helped bring down long-term interest rates and stimulate the economy. The principal message of the President's budget is that the deficit is coming down. The 1995 deficit would be 2.5% of Gross Domestic Product—down from 4.9% in 1992 and the lowest percentage of GDP since 1979.

Deficit reduction will be a major concern of Congress again this year. The balanced budget amendment is scheduled for a Senate vote later this month, and Congress will continue to consider additional spending cuts totalling $35 billion or more over the next five years.

Although major progress has been made on the deficit, more can be done. We need to cut deeply into programs that have outlived their usefulness, and look not just at spending subsidies but also tax subsidies, such as tax breaks for companies to build plants overseas. At the same time, we need to make sure that the cuts proceed at a reasonable pace and do not stall the current economic recovery or preclude productivity-enhancing investments central to the long-term health of the economy. Any sustained attack on the deficit must include a healthy economy that ensures a strong stream of federal revenues.

What to do about health care? Most of the changes from health care reform under consideration would kick in after 1995. Yet the key to reducing the budget deficit in future years is getting federal health care spending under control. For example, federal Medicare costs were $57 billion ten years ago, now stand at $143 billion, and, without program changes, will rise to $435 billion in another ten years.

Reining in federal health care costs must be a central component of the health care reform debate. We need a package that meets unmet needs and increases the health security of Americans, but also is fiscally responsible and helps bring down health care outlays. Otherwise, all the recent progress we have made on the deficit will be wiped out.

CONCLUSION:

The President's budget is the most important document of the federal government, but it does not get the public attention it should and once did. The budget reflects hundreds of tough decisions, assures a contentious debate, and puts some real limitation on federal spending. Over the past several years, Congress typically has changed a President's budget proposal by less than 1% of total spending, though it has rearranged some priorities. In this sense, the President is still the chief budgetmaker, setting the agenda which Congress largely follows.

TRIBUTE TO NARCISA RUIZ

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend Narcisa Ruiz, a dedicated community worker who serves the needs of elderly Hispanic residents in Brooklyn, NY. Narcisa is the executive director of the Diana H. Jones Senior Center which operates in Williamsburg, Greenpoint, Bushwick and surrounding areas in Brooklyn. She is an advocate for programs that will enhance the quality of life for elderly citizens.

Narcisa has served as the director of the Hispanic Outreach Program for the elderly for the past 8 years, a program geared specifically toward servicing the needs of Spanish speaking elderly.

Narcisa, as the past director of the New York State legalization impact assistance grant in Williamsburg/Bushwick, assisted thousands of immigrants to prepare for the second stage of the immigration process to become a legal permanent resident. Clearly, she has provided critical services to a constituency that vitally needs her expertise.

Her efforts have assisted in addressing the often unmet needs of Hispanic elderly. It is my pleasure and honor to recognize the contributions of Narcisa Ruiz on behalf of Brooklyn's seniors.

TRIBUTE TO THOMAS GRASSO

HON. JACK REED

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to salute a distinguished young man from Rhode Island who has attained the rank of Eagle

Matter set in this typeface indicates words inserted or appended, rather than spoken, by a Member of the House on the floor.

Scout in the Boy Scouts of America. He is Thomas Grasso of Troop 10 in Westerly, RI, and he is honored this week for his noteworthy achievement.

Not every young American who joins the Boys Scouts earns the prestigious Eagle Scout Award. In fact, only 2.5 percent of all Boy Scouts do. To earn the award, a Boy Scout must fulfill requirements in the areas of leadership, service, and outdoor skills. He must earn 21 merit badges, 11 of which are required from areas such as citizenship in the community, citizenship in the Nation, citizenship in the world, safety, environmental science, and first aid.

As he progresses through the Boy Scout ranks, a Scout must demonstrate participation in increasingly more responsible service projects. He must also demonstrate leadership skills by holding one or more specific youth leadership positions in his patrol and/or troop. This young man has distinguished himself in accordance with these criteria.

For his Eagle Scout project, Thomas repaired and reshingled storage sheds at the Frank A. Olean Regional Center in Westerly.

Mr. Speaker, I ask you and my colleagues to join me in saluting Eagle Scout Thomas Grasso. In turn, we must duly recognize the Boy Scouts of America for establishing the Eagle Scout Award and the strenuous criteria its aspirants must meet. This program has through its 80 years honed and enhanced the leadership skills and commitment to public service of many outstanding Americans, two dozen of whom now serve in the House.

It is my sincere belief that Thomas Grasso will continue his public service and in so doing will further distinguish himself and consequently better his community. I join friends, colleagues, and family who this week salute him.

AUTHORIZING CONVEYANCE OF U.S.S. "SPHINX"

HON. SOLOMON P. ORTIZ

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. ORTIZ. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation to authorize the conveyance of the U.S.S. Sphinx to the Rio Grande Military Museum in Port Isabel, TX for use as an all wars service museum.

The U.S.S. Sphinx is an amphibious vessel that first saw action during World War II. In all, the Sphinx has received nine battle stars and has served in three wars. It is now the last of its kind and deserves preservation. This vessel was transferred from the Department of Defense to the Department of Transportation, where it has been set aside for potential donation to a State for use as an artificial reef. My bill would instead authorize the Secretary of Transportation to convey the vessel to the Rio Grande Military Museum for use as a museum and tourist attraction to be located in the Port Isabel-South Padre Island area.

The cost of this conveyance would be taken up by the museum and the legislation specifically states that the movement and transfer of the vessel will be without cost to the Federal Government. Furthermore, the bill stipulates that the museum, an established not-for-profit corporation, shall demonstrate sufficient financial resources prior to conveyance.

Mr. Speaker, the benefits and value of this transfer and of the creation of this museum are numerous. The vessel will serve as a physical monument to the numerous individuals who served on the U.S.S. Sphinx and similar vessels in defense of our Nation. Its location will allow it to serve not only as a thriving tourist attraction for the numerous visitors that come to South Padre Island each year, but also as a reunion location for a number of military veterans groups from throughout the country that have expressed a strong interest in the project. In addition, the vessel and its equipment on board will be available for emergency readiness in case a natural disaster such as a hurricane strikes the area. Finally, museum officials intend to use the vessel as the vehicle for a youth vocational training program that will engage young people from the community in research and restoration projects aboard ship and in the construction and exhibition of the museum.

Mr. Speaker, this bill will allow the U.S.S. Sphinx to serve one last important mission: To preserve for future generations the valiant efforts and deeds of the U.S.S. Sphinx and its crew and to actively engage the youth of the area in this process. This no-cost-to-the-Government transfer will provide a fitting end to the U.S.S. Sphinx' honorable service record and I urge my colleagues to support this bill. Thank you.

THE LEGACY AND FUTURE OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS PRODUCTION

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I am inserting my Washington report for Wednesday, February 9, 1994, into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

THE LEGACY AND FUTURE OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS PRODUCTION

During the cold war the United States spent hundreds of billions of dollars producing nuclear weapons. The end of that era is bringing dramatic changes to nuclear weapons production. Arms control agreements and independent national security decisions under both the Bush and Clinton administrations have begun substantial reductions in the nuclear arsenal. With the nuclear threat from abroad sharply diminished, the U.S. plans to dismantle thousands of nuclear warheads this decade and is closing several production facilities as the stockpile of weapons shrinks. Combined with similar efforts in the former Soviet Union, this will make the world a safer place. Unfortunately, nearly five decades of production have left a dangerous, vast, and expensive environmental legacy, in the form of nuclear waste. Consequently, we will be paying the costs of nuclear weapons production for years to come.

The Nuclear Weapons Complex: The nuclear weapons production complex, which is run by the Department of Energy (DOE), consists of 17 major facilities for the design, construction, and testing of nuclear warheads, and production of naval reactor fuel. Major installations include the Hanford reservation near Richland, WA, and the Pantex plant near Amarillo, TX, which are run by contracted private corporations. Another is the Fernald facility in Ohio, just across the border from Indiana's 9th District. These facilities encompass about 4,000 square miles in 13 states.

As part of the reductions in military forces and spending, the nuclear weapons complex is shrinking and changing. Warhead production has ceased. Several facilities are partially closed and others, such as Fernald, are shutting down completely. The work being done at several of the remaining facilities is now largely weapons disassembly. The other shift is from the production of nuclear materials to the environmental cleanup and storage of nuclear wastes.

Although the exact number is classified, the United States currently has roughly 20,000 nuclear weapons. The number has been dropping as defense planning and arms control treaties have reduced substantially the number of necessary warheads. In 1993 the DOE was scheduled to dismantle about 1,400 weapons, but plans for the eventual size of the stockpile are not public information.

While warhead assembly has been stopped, future needs are an open question. Billions of dollars could be spent to modernize production facilities and construct new ones. Some plants are no longer needed and will remain closed; others might be required to maintain limited production of some nuclear materials. Stockpiles of plutonium, including that from warhead disassembly, eliminate the need for further production. However, tritium, another key ingredient in thermonuclear weapons, has a relatively short life span. Nevertheless, a 1991 National Academy of Sciences study found that if the stockpile were reduced to a few thousand warheads, the current supply of tritium would last for several decades. A new facility for tritium would be very expensive for what looks like a very limited need.

The Environmental Legacy: The scale of environmental contamination at these facilities is staggering; 80 million gallons of high-level waste, and millions of cubic meters of lower level wastes, are stored or disposed of at several of the facilities. Vast quantities of nonradioactive waste add to the problem. The DOE estimates that 3,700 sites throughout the nuclear weapons production complex have been contaminated by radioactive waste and other hazardous materials, which in several locations are escaping into the environment. These facilities were not designed for the long term storage of waste; in most cases the waste must be removed and prepared for permanent storage. The main threat posed by the disposed waste and deteriorating temporary storage facilities is to water sources, particularly ground water.

We are faced with two formidable environmental problems: the clean-up of radioactive and other hazardous waste at the production facilities and the longterm isolation and storage of various types of radioactive materials. Neither problem is simply one of time and money. Most of the several billion dollars spent on DOE environmental restoration has been exclusively for research into how to clean up and store various types of waste; very little storage or cleanup has actually occurred. The DOE now spends about one third of its total budget on environmental restoration. Even such a large sum is a small down payment on the eventual total cost of cleaning up all the nuclear weapons facilities in the country. Projected cleanup costs over the next 30 years range from $100 to $300 billion.

The long-term isolation and storage of radioactive materials and waste is the second major problem. Plutonium, one of the most expensive materials ever produced, may be the hardest thing on earth to dispose of. It reaches background levels of radioactivity in 240,000 years. Despite years and billions of dollars of work on a solution, the best means for the disposal of highly radioactive waste is still a matter of dispute. Current plans center on vitrification (the transformation of the waste into a glass-like solid) and underground storage in the Yucca Mountain facility in Nevada. Work is proceeding amid concerns that even such elaborate measures cannot guarantee safe isolation for the thousands of years necessary. It is possible to recycle both highly-enriched uranium and plutonium for use in commercial electricity production, but some of the technology is untested, and nuclear power remains quite controversial in this country. Furthermore, the commercial recycling of weapons-grade materials, both here and especially in Russia, raises the specter of nuclear proliferation should even small quantities fall into the wrong hands.

Conclusion: During the cold war, national security priorities prevailed to such an extent that other concerns frequently were neglected. We were reminded of this recently with the disclosures about human radiation experiments. The veil of secrecy that shrouded the nuclear weapons production complex obscured vast environmental problems, the full extent of which is still being discovered. While national security remains a paramount concern, other matters demand our attention, including the environment. We must confront this nuclear legacy and deal with its consequences. Most pressing is the need for a solution to the long term storage or disposal of radioactive waste. We have to accelerate efforts to find a safe, permanent method of disposal, including a nuclear waste repository. And while we clean up the mess we must ensure that any future production is absolutely necessary and does not repeat the mistakes of the past.

CONGRESS' ROLE IN SHAPING THE FUTURE

HON. DEAN A. GALLO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. GALLO. Mr. Speaker, last Thursday, February 17, I held a town meeting in Roseland, NJ, that demonstrates that the people in my district—and, I imagine, people around America—are deeply concerned abut their future and about Congress' role in shaping that future.

In a room designed to hold 100, so many people were squeezed in that we had to run the air-conditioning—despite the fact that a foot and a half of snow was on the ground outside.

Those who were unable to find space inside the meeting room—and there were at least 50—stood in the hall, listening and writing down questions and comments that were passed inside to be read to those gathered.

In my 10 years in Congress, I cannot remember a larger or more interested group of citizens at a town meeting.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that so many people braved the cold and ice on a weekday night because they are vitally interested in what Government is going to do in an effort to address the problems our country is facing.

However, the common theme that ran through the meeting, and through the written comments of those who did not have a chance to speak, was not "how will government solve my problems," but rather, "what will government do to help me solve my problems."

In addressing health care, there was very little support expressed for the President's effort to turn over to the Federal Government our health care system.

People identified problems that Government could help people solve, but there was no expectation—indeed there was strong opposition to the idea—that expanding the size of Government's control over this part of our lives would solve the problems in our health care system.

Regarding crime, people expressed concern that Congress' efforts to reduce crime would instead restrict the rights of law abiding citizens. There was support, not only for harsher punishment for criminals, but for making certain that our judicial system does not give more weight to the rights of criminals than to those of the victims and the rest of society.

People are also concerned about Federal spending and Congress' inability to bring the deficit under control. One small business owner in the audience told me that he wished Congress would approach its budgetary problems the way he would, by finding things to cut before raising taxes.

All of these issues impact our future. What will the future of our health care system be? Will it continue to provide the best quality health care available anywhere in the world?

What will the future of our communities be like? Will we be able to walk the streets without fear? Will our children feel safe in school?

What will the future of our children and grandchildren be like? Will they find themselves so overwhelmed by the burden of Government debt that their ability to support themselves and their families will be even further eroded?

Many other issues were raised—too many to enumerate here—but what they all had in common was their concern with the future of our families, communities, State, and Nation.

Actions Congress takes in the coming months will help determine the answers to these and other important questions. I believe that each of the answers we attempt to provide should keep one fundamental thought in mind: "Will the action we take make it easier for people to solve problems and plan for a better future or will they make it easier for government to control the shape of our future?"

If we can keep this basic question in mind, I believe that we can help our constituents face the future with the optimism, spirit, and determination that has been the hallmark of Americans down through the generations.

RICHARD ROBERTS WAS OUTSTANDING PUBLIC SERVANT IN QUEENSBURY, NY

HON. GERALD B.H. SOLOMON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, one of the finest public servants I have ever known, Richard Roberts of Queensbury, NY, died recently, leaving a void that can never be filled.

When I moved into the Glens Falls area Richard Roberts was one of the first people I met. And when I became supervisor of the Town of Queensbury, I asked him to serve on the planning board. He had a quality that's so important for a board like that, and that's respect for the feelings of other people. He looked out for the best long-term interests of Queensbury, but he treated people fairly.

He was the chairman of the planning board from 1978 to 1990, and lead the Town of Queensbury through a period of unprecedented growth and development.

But the planning board wasn't Richard Roberts only contribution to the town and to his neighbors. He also served as director of the Warren County Dairy Association and as chairman of the Committee of Agriculture Stabilization and Conservation.

Last year, he was the recipient of the Liberty Bell Award from the Warren County Bar Association for his years of service on the planning board.

Mr. Roberts operated a dairy farm for several decades, but before that he served with the 45th Infantry Division in Korea.

He was also an avid sailor, golfer, and gardener. But the most important thing about Richard Roberts is that he was also a good family man who was loved by all who knew him.

Mr. Speaker, I ask you and every member to join me in expressing condolences to his wife, Grace, and to his three children. The Town of Queensbury has lost an outstanding public servant, and I have lost a good friend.

TRIBUTE TO THE PHILADELPHIA TRIBUNE

HON. THOMAS M. FOGLIETTA

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. FOGLIETTA. Mr. Speaker, I rise on this occasion to salute the Philadelphia Tribune, America's oldest African-American newspaper, on the occasion of its 110th anniversary. The paper was founded in 1884 as a forum for African-American progress and justice by Christopher James Perry, Sr., and continues that mission today under current chairman of the board, Walter R. Livingston, and president, Robert W. Bogle.

The Tribune has a great history of service to the African-American community in the Philadelphia area, paving the road for positive change to the political and social landscape. In 1929, under the leadership of editor E. Washington Rhodes, the Tribune launched a campaign for the appointment of a black to the city's board of education, the election of a black city council member, and the election of a black judge. In 1932, these efforts began to bear fruit, as Dr. John P. Turner was named to the school board where he served with distinction until his death in 1958.

In 1934, the Tribune fought, through its news and editorial pages, to help bring an end to racial riots in Chester, PA, where movie theaters were segregated and where African-American children went to "for colored only" schools until they reached the 11th grade. In 1937, the Tribune joined with the North Philadelphia Civic Betterment League and the black veterans organizations to sponsor America's first Clean Block Campaign, and in 1947, the Philadelphia Tribune Charities was established to assist the community's needy, to foster civic pride and betterment, and encourage worthy students through scholarship aid.

The Philadelphia Tribune has always been blessed with strong, active leadership. E. Washington Rhodes, in addition to his duties as president of the Tribune from 1922 through 1970, served in a wide variety of distinguished positions. In 1926, he was appointed Assistant U.S. Attorney for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania by President Calvin Coolidge. He was the first African-American ever to hold such a position. From 1933 to 1935, Rhodes served as president of the National Bar Association, the professional association of African-American attorneys. In 1938, Rhodes was elected as a State Representative in the 6th legislative district. As the Tribune's publisher, E. Washington Rhodes was in 1962 elected as president of the National Newspaper Publisher's Association. Reaffirming the Tribune's continued prominence as a national leader in its field, this same position is now held by current Tribune president, Robert Bogle, who is serving his second term as president of this, the oldest trade association for African-American media.

Mr. Speaker, the Philadelphia Tribune is well into its second century of service to the Philadelphia community. I join with the Philadelphia community in congratulating the Tribune on its 110 years of history.

TRIBUTE TO ELAINE FIGUEROA

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to recognize Ms. Elaine Figueroa. Ms. Figueroa is a devoted wife, mother of two, humanitarian, and community activist.

Elaine has helped feed the homeless at Saint Rita's soup kitchen, and actively participates in parent-supported programs at I.S. 302, and the Police Athletic League [PAL]. Elaine is also responsible for introducing a new school program called Victim Service. Ms. Figueroa serves as a member of the New Democratic Club and her block association committee.

She truly symbolizes her quote, "My goal is to be there for my family and the community." It is my pleasure to salute Elaine on her tremendous efforts to help members of her community.

THE STATE OF THE UNION AND THE CONGRESSIONAL AGENDA

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert my Washington Report for Wednesday, February 2, 1994, into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

THE STATE OF THE UNION AND THE CONGRESSIONAL AGENDA

President Clinton delivered his first State of the Union address last week with no major surprises but plenty of policy recommendations, detail, and moral passion. The programs that the President emphasized were the ones everyone expected him to emphasize: health care, crime, education, welfare. It was a strong speech, and his rhetorical gifts were on full display. The President clearly set an ambitious agenda for the nation, but he also used symbols and illustrations in an effort to seize the moral high ground.

MAJOR THEMES

The speech took place against a backdrop of solid economic accomplishments. The economic recovery that is occurring in the country has helped President Clinton's standing in the polls. Particularly encouraging has been the dramatic success in reducing the deficit—originally projected to be $300 billion in 1995 but now expected to be less than $180 billion. The President called for continued attention to deficit reduction, saying that his budget will be one of the toughest ever presented to Congress and will cut spending for 300 programs and eliminate 100 others.

The President gave nearly equal billing to health care reform, welfare reform, and crime. On health care the President pushed his plan to expand the employer-based system to guarantee insurance for everyone. His insistence that health care reform means comprehensive, guaranteed benefits for every American and his threat to veto any health care package without it was a tough stance. His veto threat increased the stakes for health legislation, but he did indicate a willingness to negotiate on all other aspects of the health care proposal.

He emphasized overhauling the welfare system to reward work over welfare, and repeated his view that after two years on welfare, anyone who can work must work—in the private sector if possible, in community service if necessary.

Responding to the increased national concern about crime, he said that we must reclaim our streets from violent criminals. He called for life behind bars for those convicted of three violent crimes, more police on the streets, and a ban on assault weapons, while at the same time saying that we need to improve economic opportunities in America's poorest and toughest neighborhoods.

Several other items were on the President's domestic agenda: education reform, a new "reemployment" program replacing current job training and unemployment programs, campaign finance and lobbying reform, clean water legislation, and creation of an information superhighway linking every classroom, library, and hospital by the end of the century.

The President clearly did not intend to make foreign policy the focus of his speech. He barely mentioned the crises in Bosnia and Somalia. Much criticized recently for failing to articulate his foreign policy goals, he made an effort to be clearer about those goals in his State of the Union address. His refusal to cut military spending further was strongly stated and widely applauded. It indicates a clear shift in the mood of Congress in the last few years on the level of military spending.

The dramatic highlight of the 63 minute speech came at the closing with his emphasis on family, community, and work. One of the President's major themes has been that America can prosper only if its citizens rely less on government and more on themselves. When he said in his speech that our problems go beyond the reach of government, he drew strong applause from legislators who are very conscious of the limitations of lawmaking.

CONGRESSIONAL AGENDA

The major themes emphasized by the President mean that the 103rd Congress could well turn out to be the "reform Congress". Besides taking up the policy reforms urged by the President—in health care, welfare, education and training—Congress will take up several reforms in the way it does business. It will continue its work on campaign finance and lobbying reforms and take up a wide-ranging package that would cut congressional committees and staff, curb "pork barrel" spending, reform the budget process, make Congress live under the laws that apply to everyone else, and improve the ethics process.

There are several reasons for the emphasis on reform this year. Some of the reform areas are left over from the Bush presidency, in which the domestic agenda was fairly modest and the emphasis was on "staying the course". President Clinton emphasized many of these reforms during his presidential campaign, and he wants to make good on his promises. And after a year of focussing mainly on economic matters—cutting the deficit and reducing trade barriers—he is prepared to move on to other priorities this year. In addition, public opinion polls continue to show low approval ratings of the job Congress is doing, and Congress and the President want to show that they can tackle the issues that Americans care most about.

OUTLOOK

Although each item on this reform agenda before Congress is important, it will be extremely difficult, if not impossible, to accomplish all of it in one year. Many of the problems are complex and technical, with little consensus over how they should be handled. In some areas, there is not even agreement over what the problem is—for example, whether the health system is in crisis or not.

Political obstacles also loom large. Partisan considerations could increase during this election year, and many of the reforms need to work their way through multiple congressional committees, are opposed by determined special interest groups, and face the threat of a filibuster in the Senate. It is my sense that a large dose of bipartisanship will be needed to pass these reform bills.

Despite the difficulties ahead, I expect some significant accomplishments during this second session of the 103rd Congress. Congress and the President broke gridlock last year, but a great deal remains to be done.

HON. THOMAS E. PETRI

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to congratulate the Ukrainian National Association for its century of dedication and service to the Ukrainian-American community.

While the Ukrainian National Association was preserving the Ukrainian culture in the United States, it never lost sight of its goal of helping Ukraine become an independent and democratic nation.

The Ukrainian National Association has assisted its 66,000 members through financial, education, and cultural endeavors to preserve the customs and heritage of the Ukrainian-American community. It has also assisted United States policymakers by keeping them up-to-date on the continually changing struggle for independence in the Ukraine.

Since Ukraine gained its independence the Ukrainian National Association has continued its commitment to the people of Ukraine by providing humanitarian, educational, and technical assistance. I applaud the Ukrainian National Association for its effort.

It is my hope that the Ukrainian National Association will continue to work in cooperation with the Ukraine and the United States to promote and develop democracy and free markets in the Ukraine.

LEGISLATION TO MODIFY BOUNDARIES OF FLOWER GARDENS NATIONAL MARINE SANCTUARY

HON. SOLOMON P. ORTIZ

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. ORTIZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce legislation which will modify the boundaries of the Flower Gardens National Marine Sanctuary.

The Flower Gardens Sanctuary was established by Congress in 1992 and has been a model in the National Marine Sanctuary Program which is administered by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration. The sanctuary is located 120 miles off of the Texas coast, and protects the northern-most living coral reefs on the U.S. continental shelf. The Flower Gardens Sanctuary protects two discrete areas encompassing 47.1 square miles which are used by sport divers, fishermen, and researchers.

The bill I introduce today will add a small, nearby bank to the Flower Gardens Bank Sanctuary. The area, known as Stetson Bank, is known for its spectacular array of fish and invertebrates and is a common destination for scuba divers. Damage to the bank due to anchoring and depletion of resources through shell collecting and spearfishing has led scientists and sport divers to call for inclusion of the bank within the Flower Gardens Sanctuary. The proposed legislation directs the Secretary of Commerce to modify sanctuary boundaries and regulations to include Stetson Bank, and to provide public notice in the Federal Register.

Mr. Speaker, this small but important area is a valuable marine resource and warrants protection as part of the Flower Gardens National Marine Sanctuary. I urge you and the other Members of the House to support this bill.

TRIBUTE TO YVETTE C. GRANT

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, I want to introduce the Members of the House of Representatives to Yvette C. Grant. Yvette is a full-time educator, community leader, and mother. She was born in Harlem, NY. She attended Boston University, and received her master's of education from Columbia University.

Yvette's achievements include being a research associate and education coordinator at the ARTC Skills Training Center in Brooklyn, NY. She is an educator at P.S. 213 in the New York City Board of Education. To her credit, she is involved in progressive programs that promote conflict resolution, mentoring, and remedial tutorial assistance.

Yvette is the director of Why See Grant? Enterprises. She also is responsible for a host of projects that promote artistic development among black youth. A physically active person, Yvette is also an aerobic and step instructor. She is an active walker, and enjoys photography, dance aerobics, and reading.

The hallmark of Yvette Grant is her dedication to family, and their love, respect, and admiration for her.

HONORING THEIR BRETHREN

HON. JAMES A. BARCIA

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. BARCIA. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride that I pay tribute to the Saginaw Township Police Department Honor Guard, as we celebrate their first year of dedicated service to our Saginaw community.

This year past, the Saginaw Township Police Department established the honor guard to represent the Police Department at funerals for fallen officers throughout the State, parades, ceremonies and other local functions to highlight the integral role the police play in our community.

The tenets subscribed to by the Saginaw Township Police Department Honor Guard echo the commitment and dedication with which officers pledge to uphold every waking moment, recognizing their badge as a symbol of public faith and accepting it as a public trust.

Often forgotten in our litigious society is the awesome responsibility vested in local police departments. The Saginaw Township honor guard reminds each of us that as officers, their fundamental duty is to serve and protect, to safeguard lives and property, to protect the innocent against deception, the weak from oppression, and the peaceful from violence.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all my colleagues to salute the continuing efforts of our local police departments, notably the lofty principles which the Saginaw Township Honor Guard continually preserve.

TIMES-UNION EDITORIAL TELLS TRUTH ABOUT CLINTON HEALTH CARE PLAN

HON. GERALD B.H. SOLOMON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, on February 13, the Albany Times-Union, a fine Hearst daily newspaper in 22d district of New York, published what I consider the finest editorial I've ever read concerning health care.

The editorial argues what more and more Americans have come to realize. The Clinton health care plan not only won't work, it will worsen health care, greatly expand the Federal bureaucracy, and bankrupt the economy.

Mr. Speaker, I proudly place this outstanding editorial in today's RECORD, and urge all Members to read it.

WRONG RX FOR HEALTH CARE

The issue: An examination of the proposed Clinton plan shows it won't do what it claims.

Our opinion: An alternative to overhauling the whole system is needed.

The more closely one examines the proposed Clinton health care reform plan, the more it is evident that those responsible for it have learned nothing from the failed efforts of centralized planning.

For the Clinton reform scheme is nothing if not a blueprint for converting America's largely private health care industry into a single, micromanaged bureaucracy whose head, naturally, would lie in Washington, D.C.

An outline of the bureaucracy that would be needed to carry this off should by itself be enough to give the game away. One member of Congress whose staff actually bothered to read the full plan has reported that it will require 59 new federal programs or bureaus, expand 20 others, and will impose almost 80 new federal mandates, besides changing the tax code. It would include—as a small sample—an agency for health care policy, a drug pricing committee, the by now notorious health alliances, a bureau to regulate the corporate alliances, another to monitor the performance of regional alliances, yet another monitor health care implementation at the county level, and the list goes on.

This bureaucracy is needed, presumably, to control costs. Controlling costs would entail the government dictating how much money overall is to be spent on health care. The White House has denied that this is so, saying that only insurance premiums would be controlled. But, clearly, if insurance premiums are annually fixed, it necessarily follows that the amount of money available for health care will also be fixed. Thus it would seem to be true, as some critics contend, that the plan entails dictating, albeit indirectly, how much money doctors can receive for what treatment.

Naturally, given such a grandiose plan, the proposal must, and does, detail how most persons will be required to enroll in one of the regional alliances, how health care will be limited and rationed, and how doctors will be directed into certain fields of practice.

The plan requires as much bureaucracy as it does because of the desire to fix beforehand every little aspect of health care—everything from what treatment is available in what amounts to who should be treated (people over 65, for example, would not have access to most new cures).

Unfortunately, the Congressional Budget Office has now given the lie to claim the money will be saved, at least in the short run. Instead of trimming $59 billion in the first six years, as the President claimed, it will likely add $74 billion to the total cost of health care.

Central planning, it turns out, cannot even deliver on cost cutting. What reason is there to believe it could deliver health care?

The proposal itself suggests that for many people health care could be considerably worse. In addition, we would be saddled with a huge, and expensive, new bureaucracy; while the unanticipated added costs, laid on small business for the most part, would very likely depress the economy.

Hillary Rodham Clinton publicly has stated that the plan would not restrict the patient's choice of doctor. The written plan itself contradicts that. The head of the Office of Management and Budget said the plan will neither set prices nor allocate care. By fixing insurance premiums, it would almost surely do both.

Of course, it has some good points, not least of which are the guarantee for universal health insurance; the portability of insurance, and the promise of coverage for people with "pre-existing" ailments. Any revised plan should include these elements, but should most certainly exclude any reliance on the creation of a new bureaucracy, and all the rules, regulations, employees and pension plans that that entails.

LEGALIZING DRUGS

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert my Washington Report for Wednesday, February 23, 1994 into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

LEGALIZING DRUGS

In recent high school convocations I have held in southern Indiana, the question of whether drugs should be legalized is almost always asked. It is a timely question. Late last year, when Surgeon General Joycelyn Elders suggested that the idea of legalizing drugs should be studied, her remarks drew harsh criticism from the public, law enforcement officials, and President Clinton. I do not support legalization.

Arguments for Legalization: Drug legalization has over the years attracted proponents from all points on the political spectrum. But even they do not always agree on answers to serious questions about where to draw the line: which drugs would be legal, who would administer the dosage of drugs, what quantities each individual would get, would the government establish tax-supported facilities to sell drugs, where would the supply of drugs come from, how much would drugs cost, how would underage people be dealt with? Some proponents favor selling drugs in the same manner as tobacco and alcohol, with restrictions only on sales to minors and licensing requirements for retailers. Most proponents of legalization, though, favor additional regulations, such as monitoring drug production carefully, including health warnings on drug labels, and allowing only certain establishments, such as pharmacies, to sell drugs. Some favor assessing a substantial tax on drugs offered for sale, limiting the quantity of drugs a person could buy, legalizing only certain drugs, or only legalizing drugs prescribed as part of treatment and detoxification programs for addicts.

Proponents' primary argument is that drug legalization would reduce violent crime. They often liken the current drug-related crime problem to the Prohibition era, when ruthless gangsters operated an illicit trade in alcohol. If the black market for drugs were eliminated, their price would be drastically reduced, and drug users would no longer have to resort to crime to support their habit. Furthermore, drug pushers would be put out of business, thereby ending their violent turf wars.

Second, legalization advocates believe that the public health would improve. Money currently devoted to drug enforcement activities could be used instead for treatment and prevention. Since drug addicts would no longer fear prosecution, they might be more apt to seek treatment. Intravenous drug users would have access to clean needles, and thus be less likely to spread the virus which causes AIDS. Since the government would be able to closely monitor the production of drugs, drug deaths that are currently caused by ingestion of impure or too potent drugs would be prevented.

Third, proponents argue that a punitive approach toward drug use is a futile and inefficient use of law enforcement resources. Drugs will always flow into this country to some extent, no matter how great an effort is made to stop them, and drug dealers will become increasingly violent and sophisticated in response to more vigorous law enforcement. Were drugs no longer illegal, the intense pressure on the courts, the prison system and police would be abated.

Arguments Against Legalization: Those who oppose drug legalization, like me, argue that while the cost of fighting drugs is very high, the cost of not doing so is higher.

First, there is general agreement that drug use will increase under legalization. Open availability of drugs would compound already mammoth social problems in the country. It would increase drug abuse and addiction, perhaps to catastrophic levels, by making highly dangerous substances cheaper, purer, and more widely available. Many Americans currently do not use drugs precisely because they are illegal. If drugs were made legal, a whole new class of potential addicts would be opened up. It is entirely possible that the new treatment facilities made available because of drug legalization would see a substantial number of people who would never have become addicted were drugs still illegal. The most apt analogy to Prohibition may be that after its repeal, alcohol consumption increased by 350%. Furthermore, the threat posed to the public health by illegal drugs does not even approach that presented by currently legal drugs. Tobacco and alcohol kill over 500,000 Americans every year, and exact a huge toll on society through lost productivity, rising health costs, chronic disease and premature death. What is to make us think that use of other drugs will not follow the same trend if made legal?

Second, legalization would fail to eliminate drug crime, except by defining it away. Even if drugs were cheaper, some drug addicts would not be able to afford all the drugs they want to would continue to rob and steal to support their habit. Moreover, some drug users would be unhappy with the regulations that are placed on legal drug sales. If drugs were only available in certain quantities, to certain people, or in certain varieties, the black market, and its attendant violence would continue to exist.

Third, legalization would send precisely the wrong message to our young people. Drug legalization would undermine any educational effort to persuade young people about the harmful effects of drugs. It would shift social approval toward drug use and away from abstinence, and suggest that the government is morally indifferent to drugs.

Assessment: Most of us would probably agree that our nation's current anti-drug efforts are not working as well as we would like, but I do not believe that legalization is the answer to America's drug problem. Health concerns and increasingly negative social attitudes about drugs are probable reasons for declining drug use. We must build on those gains. Fortunately, more 85% of American voters believe that drugs should be illegal.

I support strengthened efforts to eradicate foreign drug crops, interdict the flow of drugs into this country, and lock up drug dealers. But I also believe we must put much more effort into reducing demand for drugs, through prevention, education and treatment. Most of the answers to American drug problems lie here at home. We most not legalize drugs and concede defeat to those whose goal is to ruin others' lives.

TRIBUTE TO JUDITH MARY MUNEIO FOUST

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, many of us owe a debt of gratitude to librarians, for it is they who have promoted literacy and intellectually enriched the lives of countless Americans. I am honored to recognize Judith Mary Muneio Foust, a dedicated librarian.

Judith received an undergraduate degree in mathematics from Nazareth College, and graduate degrees respectively from Wayne State and Penn State Universities. She presently serves as the deputy director for the Brooklyn Public Library.

Judith is actively involved in her community. She is a member of the 10th Congressional District Education Commission. She also serves as a delegate to the New York Urban League from the NYUL Brooklyn Advisory Board.

Ms. Foust is a highly published author who has dedicated herself to enlightening avid readers, students, and professionals. I salute Judith Foust for her dedication to the Brooklyn Public Library.

TRIBUTE TO HENRY NICHOLAS

HON. THOMAS M. FOGLIETTA

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. FOGLIETTA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor a dedicated, long time advocate of organized labor and a very distinguished resident of the city of Philadelphia. Henry Nicholas began his career as a labor organizer in 1959, when as a worker at Mount Sinai Hospital in Manhattan, he led the campaign to organize local 1199 of the Drug and Hospital Employees Union. Soon after, he was instrumental in the 1199 strike which led to the first union contracts for thousands of New York City hospital employees.

By 1969, thanks to Henry's tireless organizational efforts for local 1199 in New York, the union drive was expanded to the national level, with Henry being named as the assistant director for the 1199 National Organization Committee. In this role, Henry led hospital worker organizational campaigns in Pittsburgh, Ohio, and Detroit. He also gained national attention for leading the 113-day hospital strike in Charleston, SC, a major event in the struggle for black civil rights. By 1973, the success of the national hospital organizing drive, due in large part to Henry's enthusiasm and tireless dedication, led to the creation of the National Union of Hospital and Health Care Employees, with Henry elected as its first secretary-treasurer.

Henry arrived in Philadelphia that same year and within 2 years won contracts for over 5,000 employees of Philadelphia's major health care institutions. He also played a key role in winning the right to union representation for Pennsylvania hospital workers. Henry's hard work led to the chartering of district 1199C, the Philadelphia local of the national union by the spring of 1974. This local now represents over 15,000 hospital and health care employees from 110 institutions in the Delaware Valley area. Henry's achievements were recognized in 1981 by his election as the second national president of the National Union of Hospital and Health Care Employees. Under his leadership, the national union has extended its membership to 21 States, the District of Columbia, and Puerto Rico.

Henry has had a profound impact on my district, where he lives. Despite all his successes on the national level, he has not abandoned north Philadelphia or its people. He has been one of my closest advisors, demonstrating great concern for the quality of life for health care workers, the homeless, the elderly, and children. Henry has emerged as a national spokesman in the fight to preserve quality patient care, opposing economic cutbacks in health care and insensitive health care reimbursement policies and programs. As the current debate on health care reform proceeds, he will continue to be a forceful advocate for providers and patients alike in the Philadelphia area.

In recognition of Henry Nicholas' dedication to his work and compassion for his community, I join with his family, friends, colleagues, and all members of the National Union of Hospital and Health Care Employees in honoring him. He is a true leader for these times and a model for us all.

HON. JAMES A. BARCIA

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. BARCIA of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to highlight the outstanding efforts of the Junior League of Saginaw Valley as we celebrate their 60th year of dedicated service to our Saginaw Valley community.

As advocates for community empowerment, the Junior League of Saginaw Valley has successfully developed reciprocal programs which not only educate communities on those issues elevating the quality of life for Michigan residents, but continually focus their energies on major legislative initiatives to enhance the impact of direct service projects.

At present, the Junior League of Saginaw Valley has initiated, staffed, or funded several of the most successful community-based programs in the mid-Michigan area, notably the First Ward Community Center, the Voluntary Action Center, the Saginaw Art Museum, and the Saginaw Community Foundation.

Yet while affecting many in our community, the true commitment of the Junior League is to children, and their subsequent relation to family development. The Junior League's efforts in such areas as teen pregnancy support and prevention, transitional housing programs, children's grief support, and community immunization programs highlight a necessary, constructive, perpetual force for change in our community.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all my colleagues to salute the dedicated efforts of the Junior League of Saginaw Valley as they pave the way for tomorrow's leaders.

NARCOTICS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to draw your attention to the recent remarks by the gentleman from New York, Mr. BEN GILMAN, before the 42d European Parliament/United States Congress Interparliamentary Meeting in Athens, Greece, regarding narcotics.

At the meeting, Representative GILMAN remarked on narcotics. In those remarks, he noted that drug trafficking is at an alltime high. Not only does this problem hit us here in the United States, but it also affects other nations all over the globe. In Southeast Asia, for example, Burma has a never-ending growth rate in opium production and heroin trade. In Colombia, despite drug lord Escobar's death, drug suppliers continue to increase cocaine trafficking.

My friend from New York correctly points out that this is an administration problem. Unfortunately, neither the Clinton administration nor Congress are making the war on drugs their top priority.

Stricter sentences and penalties must be imposed on those caught trafficking, dealing, or using narcotics. We need to work together with other governments to establish these tough penalties at home and abroad.

We must be firm and resolute in our opposition to drug use. In this regard, I am pleased to have worked with Mr. GILMAN in requiring drug testing for certain Government employees who are involved in safety related or national security positions.

I am inserting the full text of Representative GILMAN'S remarks on the international efforts to combat narcotics trafficking.

NARCOTICS

I had the opportunity last year of meeting with Ms. Heinke Salish in Washington to exchange views on the narcotics-related work of the European Parliament's Committee on Civil Liberties and Internal Affairs. I want to congratulate my European colleagues for increasing the visibility of the narcotics issue within the European Parliament with this important effort.

In the U.S., the new Clinton Administration struggled last year with developing its own anti-drug policy. We, on our side of the Atlantic, lost ground to the drug traffickers. The Administration's indecision and the change in emphasis away from interdiction and eradication to primarily treatment of the hard core user, has set us back in the battle against the traffickers.

In the Congress, as well, we lost further ground in 1993 with the elimination of the House Select Committee on Narcotics for cost saving reasons, not lack of interest, I might add. Ironically, I have long urged that the European Parliament establish its own special Narcotics Committee as you have, sadly only to see the U.S. Congress eliminate its own select committee.

Despite these changes, for the drug traffickers, it has been business as usual. Heroin use is once again on the rise in our country. Opium production and heroin trade from Southeast Asia, especially Burma, is higher than we can ever recall, and shows no sign of abating. Even with Drug Kingpin Pablo Escobar's death in Colombia, the cocaine traffic will continue, carried on by the more sophisticated Cali cartel.

However, let us not overlook the fact that Escobar's death was an important victory for legitimate governments over those who would rule by violence and intimidation to promote the illicit drug trade. It is a trade that soon infects an entire society, including its government systems, and all other institutions of stability that we know. We must protect our societies from the traffickers, if freedom is to survive.

Escobar's death is reflective of the violent nature of the narcotics trade. Those who live by the sword die by the sword. Hopefully, from his violent death, the youth of the world will learn that the glamour and attraction that the drug trade may hold can also lead to a violent end. The Colombian government is to be complimented for its courageous and dogged pursuit of this international outlaw.

Throughout the world today there is a growing awareness that illicit drugs are a major international problem. It is no longer just an American problem, as we heard from too many just a few years ago. Narcotics producers, traffickers and consumers are not limited by any geographic, political, ethnic or ideological boundaries. Traffickers produce and sell to anyone, and consumers can be found in every society and at every socioeconomic level.

Europe has long been a consumer market and a transit point for Asian heroin. It has also become an increasingly attractive market for Latin America's cocaine cartels. The U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) estimates that 55 percent of the cocaine destined for Europe transits through the Iberian Peninsula. The Cali Cartel, stronger than ever with Escobar's demise, is the major source of European cocaine.

Europe has also grown as a money laundering location, and seen the development of new and menacing criminal organizations, especially in some of the states of the former Soviet Union. Joint U.S.-European-Latin law enforcement efforts have disrupted money laundering operations in Italy, Spain, Switzerland, Germany and Belgium to mention only a few.

According to both the U.S. State Department and our General Accounting Office, European commitment to international counternarcotics controls is growing. There is also growing cooperation among our law enforcement communities. All of these positive steps we must continue to support to be effective against the scourge of illicit narcotics.

As these important cooperative strides continue, permit me to share with you some insights I have gained in over twenty years of action and legislative involvement in counternarcotics efforts.

In fighting illicit narcotics, no one government action or program by itself is sufficient. There must be a combination of programs to address both the supply and demand aspects of this epidemic. The narcotics problem cannot be overcome by concentrating all one's resources on the demand side of treatment, education and rehabilitation efforts alone.

Any successful drug war must truly be comprehensive and fought simultaneously on many fronts. It must contain components that support eradication and alternative development for producing countries, effective, interdiction and enforcement programs, along with education, treatment and rehabilitation efforts at home. Any emphasis of one to the detriment of the other, simply doesn't work.

Over the last few years, the United States has gained invaluable experience in fighting narcotics production, distribution, and use. Together, we should build on these experiences and increase cooperation with all our allies around the globe to defeat this plague.

We stand ready to further those cooperative and productive relationships that can benefit all of our people, and generations to come, in defeating the scourge of drugs.

KEY DOCUMENTS PROVE INNOCENCE OF JOSEPH OCCHIPINTI

HON. JAMES A. TRAFICANT, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, as part of my continuing efforts to bring to light all the facts in the case of former Immigration and Naturalization Service agent Joseph Occhipinti, I submit into the RECORD the first part of a sworn affidavit from one Luis Rodriguez:

STATEMENT OF LUIS RODRIGUEZ—STATE OF NEW YORK, COUNTY OF NEW YORK

1) Luis Rodriguez, being duly sworn deposes and says I am a Dominican national and a naturalized United States citizen residing in the State of New Jersey.

2) In April and May of 1991, I agreed to work as an undercover investigator for a private investigator called David Venezian.

3) The goal of the investigation was to prove that certain Dominican merchants in upper Manhattan were involved in various crime. These merchants claiming to be honest merchants testified against the immigration officer Joseph Occhipinti had violated their civil rights and in some cases stolen money.

4) I agreed to do this undercover work at great personal risks and free of charge. The reasons were many: Mr. Occhipinti is well respected in the Dominican community for helping illegal aliens and fighting the drugs dealers and criminals who kill our children; also, Mr. Occhipinti arrested my sister about fifteen years ago as an illegal alien. He never abused her or violated her rights as these merchants say. In fact, he helped my sister to get her green card and eventually became a US citizen.

5) In April, 1991 I began to enter various Dominican bodegas and stores posing as a drug dealer from New Jersey interested in buying and selling all kind of illegal things. In these conversations I gave permission to have my conversations monitored with a tape recorder. I succeeded in proving that these merchants were involved in some of the following illegal activities: smuggling aliens, selling false documents, drug trafficking, gambling, illegal wiring of drug money to the Dominican Republic, IRS frauds, illegal sale of untaxed liquors and others. During these investigations, I successfully bought illegal bolitas (illegal gambling numbers), untaxed rum and false documents. I also negotiated the sale of stolen property, drug trafficking and illegal money transfers.

THE CRUCEY GROCERY

(1) On April 19, 1991, I went to the Crucey Grocery at 3882 Broadway, New York, New York. I placed an illegal bet and bought untaxed rum from an employee.

(2) On May 6, 1991, I met with Altagracia Crucey who was the owner of the Bodega and one of the witnesses who testified against Mr. Occhipinti. I told her I had a truck load of stolen beer that I wanted to sell. She told me she was afraid at this time to buy it because she was a government witness. She explained to me that she had been pressured to testify by the prosecutor, who was also telling her how to testify. She was upset about being a witness because the government kept on going to her house. She admitted being arrested by immigration for having a gun. She told me that she was thinking of suing the government because she had a miscarriage.

(3) I have been told that Ms. Crucey testified at trial that her bodega doesn't sell untaxed rum and bolitas. She also denied ever negotiating with me to buy the stolen beer. That testimony was a lie and could be verified by hearing the tape.

LIRANZO GROCERY

(1) On April 22nd, 1991, I spoke to the wife of Antonio "Santana" Marte at the Liranzo Grocery, 352 Audubon Avenue, New York, New York regarding the sale of stolen beer. The wife told me to speak directly to "Santana" and gave me his telephone number, (212) 928-2266.

(2) On April 27th, 1991, I called "Santana" about the stolen beer. He explained to me he was afraid to buy it because the beer was from New Jersey and did not have the five cents return stamp on the can. I also discussed with "Santana" about buying a case of untaxed Dominican rum. He told me that there was a shortage of rum because recent shipments of rum were confiscated by US Customs after they found cocaine.

3) On April 30th, 1991, I met with "Santana" at the Liranzo Grocery in order to discuss the sale of the stolen beer.

I made up the story that immigration had confiscated some of my rum. At that time, "Santana" told me that he was a government witness against an immigration officer. He was bragging how he admitted to the court being an illegal alien and how he entered the United States with someone's passport. He explained that the prosecutor promised him and other witnesses that if they testify against the officer, they will no longer be bothered by the police or immigration. So, he agreed. "Santana" bragged how he told the prosecutor he was still selling "bolitas" and did not intend to stop. The prosecutor never responded to his statement. "Santana" said that when the newspaper articles came out against the immigration officer saying he had stolen money from Liberato, "Santana" received a phone call asking him "how much money are you going to say was taken." "Santana" also said that the prosecutor had changed the first Judge in order to get a stricter Judge. He identified the Judge as being a black woman. "Santana" said that on April 29, 1991, the prosecutor had a private meeting for the witnesses testifying, he cautioned them to be careful because people may be coming around to them asking questions.

4) I have been informed that the trial "Santana" denied any interest in buying the stolen beer because it was illegal. That was a lie, The only reason he refused to buy the beer because it did not have the five cent return deposit stamp as required in New York State.

LIBERATO GROCERY

TERRORISM

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to draw your attention to the recent remarks by the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN] before the 42d European Parliament/United States Congress Interparliamentary Meeting in Athens, Greece, regarding terrorism.

In his remarks, Representative GILMAN succinctly outlines the nature of the threat facing both our Nation, and our European allies, and notes that this threat is growing, and must not be ignored. Rather, he recommends that through enhanced cooperation among governments, we can and should earnestly fight this criminal scourge on all of our societies.

I have worked closely with Mr. GILMAN on this issue, including introduction of my legislation, H.R. 1241, the Domestic Anti-Terrorism Reward Act, a measure to increase the reward for information on domestic terrorism from $500,000 to $2 million.

Furthermore, Representative GILMAN has introduced the Anti-Terrorism Act, of which I am an original cosponsor. This bill imposes a full embargo on imports from nations which continue to support international terrorism. It also addresses the threat of nuclear terrorism, and it creates a government/business antiterrorism council to seek out additional measures which our Government and businesses can take to counter terrorist activities. Finally, the bill calls for the death penalty for terrorists who murder Americans, whether at home or abroad.

I am inserting the full text of Representative GILMAN's remarks on terrorism.

TERRORISM

As we begin a new year, this is a good time to reflect on events of the past year, especially in this troubling area of international terrorism. We can never be too alert, or prepared enough, against this evil of worldwide terrorism.

On the terrorism front, 1993 was a difficult and alarming year for us in the United States. We witnessed the terrorist bombing of the World Trade Center in New York. It was a cowardly deed that took six innocent lives, caused more than a thousand injuries, and resulted in well over $600 million in property damage and business disruption. International terrorism had come home to America. We Americans, frequently the target of terrorists abroad, were no longer safe, even on our own soil.

In addition, in 1993 we saw the arrest in our nation by the FBI of several Abu Nidal terrorists who were plotting to attack the Israeli embassy in Washington, D.C. We also had a plot uncovered in Kuwait to assassinate former President George Bush. Finally, the FBI exposed and thwarted the plot to blow up the U.N. complex and commuter tunnels in New York City, as well as planned attacks on several U.N. and U.S. public officials.

In each of these incidents our government's response was swift, sure, and tough. Almost all of the figures in the World Trade Center bombing have been arrested, one with the very valuable assistance of the government of Egypt. They now face trial in our federal courts. Another suspect is the subject of a $2 million U.S. government international reward for his capture. The U.N. plotters, along with the Abu Nidal terrorists, have also been charged and await federal trial. President Clinton responded quickly in a appropriate retaliatory missile strike on the Iraqi government's intelligence headquarters for its involvement in the plot against former President Bush, based upon evidence clearly establishing a link.

These tough, aggressive responses are necessary against those who utilize terrorism as a tool for resolution of their international grievances.

The lessons for us in the U.S. in combating terrorism are clear. They are applicable here as well. Even in this post-Cold War era, we still face threats from the scourge of international terrorism. We must always maintain our guard. The threat of terrorism is still with us, whether from organized or state sponsored groups, or the newer, and looser, religiously knit groups we have observed most recently. No anger—for whatever cause—justifies the cowardly acts of the terrorist.

These unlawful acts must be met with swift, sure, and appropriate punishment from civilized society. We cannot surrender one iota of legitimacy to the terrorist in any debate on whatever cause, or for whatever grievance.

In Europe you have seen and felt the sting of terrorism this past year as well. For example, from the well coordinated and extensive acts by the Turkish Kurds (PKK), to the violent events we are all too familiar with, emanating from the situation in Northern Ireland, to cite just a few. Incidentally, we are all very hopeful for a peaceful solution in Northern Ireland to the violence that has gone on from both sides, for far too long. Our compliments to the Prime Ministers of Britain and Ireland for their courageous efforts to find a peaceful and fair solution for all concerned. We wish them success in their courageous efforts to bring about peace.

Together, all of our governments must work closely to diminish the threat of terrorism. We must cooperatively work to prevent, and solve terrorist acts. We must work to swiftly bring to justice those who must be punished for these barbaric acts. The U.N. sanctions against Libya for the Pan Am 103 bombing, is a clear case in point. Cooperatively, the international community must help bring to justice those responsible for that act that took so many innocent lives. As President Clinton said recently on the fifth anniversary of the Pan Am 103 bombing "* * * our nation will never stop pursuing justice against whose who caused it." The state sponsors of terrorism must know that it is never going to be business as usual, and that there is a heavy price to pay for behaving as international outlaws.

Our law enforcement entities must be able to share intelligence and evidence with each other, and help thwart planned acts before they occur. We must—where appropriate—permit and encourage the extradition of those responsible for acts of terrorism to face trial and swift punishment, and they must serve their full sentences. Finally, no nation must be willing to give safe haven to those who would plot from, or seek to use one nation's soil, as a base to conduct terrorism against another.

In the European Community you face even tougher new challenges against terrorism. As your border barriers diminish, along with the greater free flow of commerce, the job grows even tougher. The terrorists' travel and the cross shipment of some of the tools of their violence, is made easier. The EC's Justice Council's working groups on terrorism will have to labor even harder to foster greater cooperation and information sharing to thwart terrorism under these improved conditions for border travel and commerce.

We must not, and cannot, let the terrorists dictate or limit the ability of free nations to progress and improve commerce, and travel freely throughout the world today.

We in the U.S. stand ready to work with you against the threat of international terrorism. Together we can, and will make 1994 a better and safer year for all nations rightfully concerned about the safety of their citizens from this grave threat of terrorism.

EXPRESSING THE SENSE OF CONGRESS THAT THE PRESIDENT SHOULD NOT HAVE GRANTED DIPLOMATIC RECOGNITION TO THE FORMER YUGOSLAV REPUBLIC OF MACEDONIA

HON. OLYMPIA J. SNOWE

OF MAINE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. Speaker, like all Americans of Greek ancestry, I was extremely disappointed by the administration's recent decision to recognize the Skopje regime as an independent nation while it continues to insist on calling itself Macedonia. This decision was an insult to a loyal and trusted ally, and the only true democracy in the region—Greece. This misguided decision could further inflame tensions in a region already plagued by terrible violence and instability.

Today, I have introduced a resolution expressing the sense of the Congress that the President should not have granted diplomatic recognition to the former Yugoslav republic of Macedonia. The resolution also calls on the President to reconsider his decision and withdraw diplomatic recognition until such time as the Skopje regime renounces its use of the name Macedonia.

The name "Macedonia" is Hellenic in origin, and for thousands of years it has been the traditional name of the northern Greek province whose capital is Salonika. Archaeological evidence clearly demonstrates that the ancient Macedonians were Greek. The Macedonia of Alexander the Great was Greek, and Alexander himself was tutored by Aristotle. The Slavic people of the Skopje regime have no links to classical Greece and are not entitled to use a name that is a fundamental part of Greek history and culture.

It is also an accepted historical fact that, in 1945, Marshall Tito gave the region surrounding Skopje the name "Macedonia" in order to frustrate Bulgarian claims to that territory. It was part of a campaign to usurp Greek history and claim it for Tito's communist system. Tito's Macedonia was an artificial creation meant to serve only one purpose—giving communist Yugoslavia territorial access to the Aegean Sea through the port of Salonika.

The Skopje regime has refused to remove from its constitution a reference to the 1944 declaration by the then Communist regime calling for the unification of neighboring territories in Greece and Bulgaria with this false Macedonian Republic. Despite other amendments to that constitution adopted over the last few years, this clause reflecting an expansionist philosophy remains intact.

In addition to its flagrant and illegal use of the name Macedonia in its constitution, the Skopje regime persists in using the 16-pointed Star of Vergina, an ancient Greek emblem, in its flag and state symbols. These are just part of that regime's blatant attempt to manipulate history for its own purposes and to monopolize the Macedonian name to further its territorial claims on sovereign Greek territory. Greece, on the other hand, has repeatedly stated that it has no territorial claims on the Skopje regime.

I urge my colleagues to support this resolution. By doing so we will send an unequivocal message that the United States should support stabilizing policies that promote peaceful coexistence in the Balkans.

HON. JAMES A. TRAFICANT, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, in my 1 minute statement on Thursday, February 3, 1994, I stated that Eastman Kodak Co. cut 400,000 jobs. To clarify, Eastman Kodak Co. will cut 10,000 jobs over the next 3 years.

UKRAINIAN NATIONAL ASSOCIATION SALUTED ON 100TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. SHERWOOD L. BOEHLERT

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to honor the Ukrainian National Association, Inc., which is celebrating its 100th anniversary on the birthday of George Washington. Like the Father of our country, the UNA is pledged to freedom. UNA has never forgotten the people left behind in the Ukraine, living under the yoke of a totalitarian government. The organization's first century was devoted to preserving and supporting the ideal of a free Ukraine. With that goal accomplished, UNA has embarked on helping the Ukraine build a democratic, free market society.

Here at home, UNA's achievements are equally noteworthy. Over the past 100 years it has grown from 13 branches to 370 branches and 66,000 members in 27 States and 7 Canadian provinces. Along with providing for the life insurance needs of the Ukrainian-American community by offering low-cost life insurance protection, the UNA provides its members with a wide range of educational, cultural, social and charitable benefits.

In addition to publishing Svoboda, the oldest Ukrainian-language daily in the world, UNA has been publishing an English language newspaper, The Ukrainian Weekly, for more than 60 years, and a monthly children's magazine, Veselka [Rainbow]. As part of its fraternal benefit work, the UNA annually provides more than $120,000 in scholarships to its members. It operates Soyuzivka, a year-round, full-service resort in the beautiful Catskill Mountains of New York State.

With its stellar history and record of accomplishments, UNA deservedly looks to a second century of service and achievement as rich as the first.

It is a special privilege for me to represent a sizeable Ukrainian community in the 23rd District of New York. They are caring, sharing, loving neighbors who give unselfishly to so many worthy causes and help make a great area even greater.

THE GIFT OF SIGHT

HON. JOHN BRYANT

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. BRYANT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to remind my colleagues of the importance of preserving sight. Impairment of this precious sense can be debilitating, and in some cases cause complete dysfunction, robbing an individual of living a normal, productive life. Unobstructed sight serves as the largest data intake function of the human body. Special care and attention must be paid to improving, maintaining, and restoring this sense.

It is not only important to observe routine eye care, but to advance initiatives which educate Americans on methods to protect the human eye from damage and to provide options for those with impaired sight. Today, corneal transplantation provides many Americans with a chance of sight. In 1992, over 92,000 donor eyes were used by eye banks across the United States and Canada to restore or enhance sight and conduct research. It is with this valuable service in mind, I join with the Eye Bank Association of America [EBAA] in their effort to promote the month of March 1994 as "National Sight Conservation and Eye Donor Awareness Month."

Since 1961, when the EBAA was founded, more than 440,133 corneal transplants have been performed with a 90-percent success rate. The success rate of this procedure represents the highest success rate among all transplant surgical procedures. The thousands who have had their sight restored by transplant know firsthand the importance of support for donor programs and the EBAA's role in promoting sight restoration education. The EBAA, through its member eye banks, provides programs to increase eye donations, expedite research and maintain high-quality medical services for the deliver of corneal transplant.

Although donation of eyes for transplant and research has risen in recent years, many people are still waiting for the precious gift of sight which can only be achieved through donation. Their hopes rest with a public that is completely aware of the donation process. Great effort must be made to inform Americans that eyes are acceptable for donation, regardless of the donor's quality of vision.

We in Congress can help educate the public about the need for eye donation and encourage more Americans to become donors. We have joined the EBAA every year since 1983, and so again by saluting their commemoration of March, 1994, as "National Sight Conservation and Eye Donor Awareness Month." In so doing, we call on all Americans to support us in promoting the worthy endeavor of enhancing the lives of fellow citizens through restoration of sight.

TRIBUTE TO CLAUDETTE SMITH

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

PRIVATE SCHOOL AND HOME SCHOOL FREEDOM AMENDMENT INTRODUCED

HON. RICHARD K. ARMEY

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, I introduced the private school and home school freedom amendment to H.R. 6. This en bloc amendment is designed, first, to address the concerns of private school teachers and home-schooling parents who would inadvertently be required to undergo State certification under section 2124(e) of the act, and, second, to exempt from Federal control any private, religious, or home school that receives no funds under the act. This is a package of clarifying changes I think all Members of Congress will endorse.

I have today learned that the language of our amendment could inadvertently prevent some private schools, especially Catholic schools, from participating in Federal education programs under which they technically do not receive funds but do administer funded services. I am more than happy to accommodate this very important concern, and so I am introducing a revised version of our amendment.

NATIONAL ENGINEERS WEEK 1994

HON. GEORGE E. BROWN, JR.

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay special tribute to America's engineers, who will be celebrating National Engineers Week 1994 beginning on February 20th.

Not a day goes by in this great Nation without the brilliant creations of engineers impacting our lives in some positive way. Towering bridges that span great waterways, instant communications, faster, smaller, and more powerful computers, life saving medical devices and daring space missions are just a few reminders of the myriad contributions America's great engineers have made to our quality of life, economic strength, and global leadership. To borrow from an old ad campaign, "without engineers, life itself would be impossible."

As the cold war continues to recede and the intense competition of the international marketplace heats up, it is important to remember and honor America's engineers, because it is their new ideas, innovations, and inventions that will determine our position as a first class power or also-ran in the next century. It is the engineers who create the new technologies that make us more productive and fuel U.S. economic growth.

As in recent years, engineers will take their message directly to America's classrooms during National Engineers Week. Donald R. Beall, honorary chair of National Engineers Week and chairman of Rockwell International, and James W. Poirot, chair of National Engineers Week and president of the American Society of Civil Engineers will lead some 35,000 engineering professionals into the nation's classrooms to show 3 million students and teachers the contributions of engineers and how math and science relate to the world around them.

Another highlight of National Engineers Week is the Future City Competition which involves engineers helping intermediate school students design computer generated cities of the 21st century. Winners of local contests will compete in the national finals here in the Nation's Capital during Engineers Week.

In yet another effort to raise public awareness of engineering, as well as to have some fun, teams of engineers and engineering students will set up interactive exhibits at shopping malls across the country.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to add to the success of National Engineers Week by joining the numerous engineering organizations and corporations in promoting Engineers Week in their own congressional districts. THe excitement and interest surrounding National Engineers Week has the potential to serve as the catalyst for students to become America's next generation of engineers.

CHINESE NEW YEAR

HON. NANCY PELOSI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I rise to note that today marks the Year of the Dog in the Chinese New Year, the first day of the first Moon of the Chinese lunar calendar year 4692.

In San Francisco, which has the largest Chinatown in the United States, the streets are mostly quiet as people celebrate the first few days of the New Year at home with their families and loved ones. The public schools have also closed for the holiday to enable parents and children to observe the traditions together.

During this festive season, the streets of Chinatown will fill with banquet-goers and street carnivals, firecrackers to ward off evil spirits, lion dancers and traditional music, culminating with the great dragons heralding the Chinese New Year Parade this February 26.

Mr. Speaker, the Chinese-American communities of this Nation have contributed greatly to our Nation. On behalf of the Congress, we salute all Chinese-Americans during their season of celebration.

HON. JOSÉ E. SERRANO

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the Congressional Hispanic Caucus and as a Member of this body, in the history of which so many outstanding men and women have been honored, I rise to pay tribute to a great Puerto Rican, don Luis A. Ferré, who celebrated his 90th birthday last Thursday.

Mr. Speaker, words cannot adequately express the depth of my admiration for don Luis. And I am certain that once they learn about him, all of my colleagues, no matter what their background or political persuasion, will share my admiration for this eminent industrialist, philanthropist, art collector, musician and ex-governor of Puerto Rico.

Luis A. Ferré was born in Ponce, on February 17, 1904. The second of four sons, he was groomed to help run Ferré Industries, an enterprise which his father Antonio began as a small foundry in 1918. After attending elementary school in Ponce and high school in Morristown, NJ, Luis Ferré studied mechanical and electrical engineering at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, where he earned a B.S. and an M.S. in 1924 and 1925, respectively.

Mr. Speaker, in the course of an address he delivered to the Puerto Rico Iron Works Cooperative Association on Three Kings' Day in 1929, the 24-year-old engineer touched on two topics which are receiving a great deal of attention today: The importance of employee profit-sharing and the need for comprehensive health insurance. Early in the year that would see the dawn of the Great Depression, and more than 4 years before Franklin D. Roosevelt's New Deal, the young Luis Ferré was enunciating principles of social justice and workers' rights which were, increasingly, to become crucial to our Nation's workplaces. The employees of the Puerto Rico Iron Works soon enjoyed the benefits Luis Ferré identified in his speech, as did the employees of Ferré Industries.

Luis Ferré became politically active, and in the mid-1940's he successfully promoted the entry of Puerto Rico into the U.S. Social Security system. He was a member of the Constitutional Convention of Puerto Rico in 1951, and having been elected in 1952 as a member of the Republican Statehood party to the Puerto Rico Legislative Assembly, helped preside over the adoption of Puerto Rico's constitution. In 1967 he founded the New Progressive Party, and was elected Governor the following year with a promise to work for subsidization of farm wages, rehabilitation of slums, and control of Puerto Rico's burgeoning narcotics problem. His party, meanwhile, won half of all seats in the Puerto Rico Senate and House of Representatives, and 26 mayoral elections.

Cofounder with his brothers of the Puerto Rican Cement Co., the first Puerto Rican company to be listed on the New York Stock Exchange, don Luis had become a very wealthy man early in life. His first philanthropic venture was the founding of the Ponce Public Library in 1937. Around the same time he saved the city's only newspaper, El Día, from bankruptcy. He founded the Luis A. Ferré foundation in 1950, and the Ponce Museum of Art, now rated the finest in all of Latin America, in 1959.

Mr. Speaker, among don Luis A. Ferré's many awards are the U.S. Medal of Freedom from President Bush, the Americas Award from the Americas Foundation, an honorary Doctor of Laws from Harvard University, and an honorary Doctor of Music from the New England Conservatory of Music, where he had studied after earning his engineering degrees. At 90 years of age don Luis is still an accomplished piano player, and is still active politically.

don Luis has described himself as "revolutionary in my ideas, liberal in my objectives, and conservative in my methods." In 1969, Aspira of America, an agency promoting Puerto Rican youth, honored don Luis as a man whose life and commitments exemplify the aspirations of Puerto Rico and its people. Mr. Speaker, I know my colleagues will agree that for all of his achievements, don Luis A. Ferré is a marvel and an inspiration for us all.

CONGRESSMAN WELDON SALUTES HARRY JONES

HON. CURT WELDON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. WELDON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to an outstanding constituent of mine, Mr. Harry Jones, for his selfless acts of service to our Nation. We must never forget the contributions of those who fought for this country nor miss an opportunity to honor brave acts of patriotism.

Like many young men his age, Harry Jones joined the service set to give his all to protect our Nation and its ideals. After 2 years of service, he was challenged to do just that during the Battle of Iwo Jima. After 21 days and nights of continuous battle, he was wounded. He lay helpless for 2 hours in an enemy fire lane as the Japanese fired at his every move.

Many men were wounded as they tried to rescue him, and he was finally dragged to safety by another Philadelphian, Cpl. William P. Ward. In fact, he was the only one in his unit to survive Iwo Jima. Upon rescue, he was given water to revive him. Harry's first response was to apologize for drinking another soldier's water. It is individuals like this, Mr. Speaker, who have made America great and whose acts will live down in history.

Regrettably, Harry was severely wounded in all four limbs and lost his right arm and left leg. He suffered greatly, receiving over 4,000 needles to keep him alive. Harry suffered great physical injury, but it has never touched his spirit, which burns with patriotism and lives on as a shining example of all that is great about America.

A LETTER FROM JONNY DAUTRICH

HON. DANA ROHRABACHER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Mr. Speaker, I call to the attention of all my colleagues the following letter I received from one of my 7-year-old constituents who wrote to me of his experience with home schooling. From personal experience he favors this method of education and urges the Congress to oppose the amendment to H.R. 6 that would inhibit parents from home schooling their children.

> Hello, I'm Jonny Dautrich, I'm 7 years old and in 2nd grade and home schooled. I think home schooling is better. One reason is you can help with chores more, and you can get ahead on home schooling if you want a day off, and when you go to real school you can't. So I think you should still allow home schooling.

TRIBUTE TO MICHAEL HILL

HON. SONNY CALLAHAN

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to rise and recognize an outstanding Alabamian, Mr. Michael L. Hill, who was recently honored nationally by the Carnegie Hero Fund Commission.

On December 22, 1993, in its fifth and final award announcement in 1993, the Carnegie Hero Fund Commission named Mr. Hill as 1 of 21 recipients of the Carnegie Medal for Heroism. The medal is given to civilians who risk their lives for others.

Because of Mr. Hill's heroic efforts, Ms. Glenda A. Brock is alive today. Mr. Hill saved Ms. Brock from drowning in the Gulf of Mexico on July 2, 1992.

Ms. Brock was wading in the gulf when she was pulled away from the shore by a very strong current. She struggled to return to shore but could not make progress against the current. Walking on the beach, Mr. Hill was alerted to her situation. He entered the water and swam several hundred feet to her, grasping Ms. Brock by an arm.

Mr. Hill then swam against the current toward the shore. En route, he became tired and began pushing Ms. Brock in the direction of the shoreline. When they reached a wadable depth, Ms. Brock was aided from the water by a friend. Mr. Hill crawled out of the water and collapsed on the beach. Both he and Ms. Brock were exhausted, and required 2 days to recover fully from the incident. His valor and unselfish regard for human life serve as a standard for us all.

I commend Mr. Hill for his selfless act. All of us in the First Congressional District are proud to claim him as a citizen of south Alabama.

Mr. Speaker, I join Mr. Hill's friends and family in applauding him on this well-deserved recognition. He stands as a paragon of courage. I offer Michael Hill my warmest congratulations and wish him well in all he strives to accomplish.

INTRODUCTION OF THE "PRIVATE PROPERTY OWNERS BILL OF RIGHTS"

HON. JACK FIELDS

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. FIELDS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, 200 years ago, the people of this country declared their independence from a government that had forgotten it derived its powers from the consent of the governed. When the tyrant, King George, pushed the people around just a little too much—when he tried to destroy these rights—they rebelled.

They replaced tyranny with a Constitution and a Bill of Rights that guaranteed each and every one of us our basic rights to life, liberty, and property. The protections embodied in these two masterpieces ensure that the Government cannot come in and take our property for public use without just compensation. These protections are supposed to keep the Government from forcing some people to bear public burdens that, in all fairness and justice, should be borne by the public as a whole.

But then came the Clean Water Act and the Endangered Species Act, and just about blasted those protections apart. Of course, constitutional scholars might tell you that is impossible. But, most likely, their property has not been classified as wetlands and the Government has not spotted any spotted owls on their property.

The history of wetlands regulation would be interesting if it were not so tragic. Back in 1972, Congress passed the Clean Water Act. One section, little noted but long remembered, prohibited the discharge of dredged materials into navigable waters without a permit. It was not until 1975 that the Corps of Engineers expanded the definition of navigable waters from waters that could be navigated to include wetlands—land that may only be wet occasionally. Since that time, bureaucrats and lawyers, not Congress have been "writing wetlands law."

Many Americans have become increasingly alarmed about the arbitrary implementation of the Clean Water Act. I, too, am deeply concerned that the wetlands law, which is having such a devastating effect on American landowners, is the result of overly broad judicial and bureaucratic interpretations of the law. Today, landowners are being denied their basic constitutional right to use their land and to be compensated for the loss of that land. Let me share several horror stories about the current enforcement of wetlands regulations.

A Pennsylvania family was prevented from selling their 127 acre ancestral farm, valued at $190,000, after it was labeled a wetland. The Federal Government offered the family no compensation.

A Texas rancher had a man-made earthen stock tank for his cattle. When he moved his headquarters to the other end of the ranch, he dug a new tank, filling in the old one. The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service cited him for converting a wetland.

A Missouri farmer wanted to repair one of his farm's levees that was built in the 1930's. The land had been farmed for over 100 years. He was told that in order to repair the levee he would have to get a permit from the Corps of Engineers and maintain 25 percent of his property, without compensation, as a permanent wetland.

And, a Minnesota rancher had two one-acre glacial potholes on his farm. To make farming around them easier, he filled one and expanded the other to two acres. The Corps of Engineers objected. The Federal Government fined him $5,000 and made him dig out the original pothole.

There is little doubt that wetlands are an important habitat for many species that need protection. Regrettably, current Federal wetlands laws simply do not work. They neither improve our environment nor do they help our local communities. In short, our wetlands protection system must be improved in a comprehensive manner.

Although the Endangered Species Act has a much more structured past, its impact has not been any the less burdensome and onerous on the private citizen. There is no shortage of stories of property owners being deprived of their constitutional rights to use their property, of landowners being harassed by Government officials, and of landowners being denied the peaceful enjoyment of their property continues to grow each day.

Let me give you a few vivid examples.

In Travis County, TX, property values have dropped $359 million since the Fish and Wildlife Service listed the golden-cheeked warbler and the black-capped vireo as endangered. The State of Texas will lose $2 million in property taxes and the residents of the area are going to find it difficult, if not impossible, to sell their homes. An 80-year-old woman has been told to stop brush clearing her land. The Government has warned her that failure to do so will subject her to fines of up to $50,000 and up to 1 year in prison.

In Maryland, a couple was prohibited from preventing erosion on their property because the Government told them that it might destroy tiger beetles. Meanwhile, a 15-foot section of their property plunged into the bay. Their home is now the endangered species.

In Idaho, the water level of the Granite Dam was decreased by 37 feet to test the physical impact of a plan designed to benefit the endangered sockeye salmon. Besides thousands of other fish stranded and killed, a marina went bankrupt, docks were destroyed, and a half million dollars in damage was done to neighboring Whitman County, WA. Physical damage amounted to almost $2 million and business losses exceeded $3 million.

In Idaho, farmers have coexisted with the microscopic Bruneau Hot Spring snail for generations until the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service listed the snail as endangered. Now, the Service has told area farmers they can no longer share the water, and rural farming must be shut down so as not to the disturb the snail's habitat. Not only that, but the Service has also prohibited any cattle grazing. An entire valley of people was out of business. Fortunately, a U.S. district judge has declared the Service's designation as arbitrary and capricious and delisted the snail. But this case is the exception, not the rule.

The abuse of private property rights cannot be ignored any longer. But now, we are told that reform of the Endangered Species Act will not occur in this Congress, and while wetlands reform is moving along, that is not enough.

Today, we are taking our first step to taking back our rights—today we are introducing the private property owners bill of rights. This bill reaffirms our basic property rights and returns some balance to our legal system. This bill returns control of property to its owner. It ensures that if there is some public purpose to be served by conserving property and protecting species, the average citizen will not be forced to shoulder the entire burden. It gives the individual the right and means to expeditiously appeal decisions by unelected bureaucrats. And finally, it expeditiously appeal decisions by unelected bureaucrats. And finally, it provides swift and fair compensation to those property owners who happen to own land where the bald eagle likes to nest or the fountain darter likes to swim.

Each day Government regulations trample over private property. The people are angry.

We have new tyrants depriving us of our inalienable rights of life, liberty, and property—King George has been replaced by bureaucrats and kangaroo rats. This bill will take a first step to righting those wrongs.

TRIBUTE TO WILLIAM CARCIERI, JR.

HON. JACK REED

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to salute a distinguished individual from Rhode Island who has through his dedication, hard work and professionalism served the people of Rhode Island proudly in his role as an administrator with the State department of transportation.

Upon his graduation from the University of Rhode Island, Bill was employed by the New England Division of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, undertaking various construction projects throughout our region. While with the corp, he was also assigned to the design branch, responsible for civil and military projects, and then to the operations division, where he oversaw the maintenance and operations of flood control facilities.

After leaving the corps in 1959, he spent a brief time in California as assistant traffic engineer for the city of Los Angeles and studied advanced traffic engineering at UCLA. Upon Bill's resignation, Rhode Island was fortunate that he returned home to begin what has been a lengthy and distinguished tenure in State service.

Bill has held various positions of responsibility while at the Rhode Island Department of Transportation. He began as resident engineer, and in 1977 was appointed chief design engineer. In 1981, Bill was promoted to chief engineer and during his tenure he oversaw the largest ever increase in both production and Federal funding. It is through his leadership and professionalism that many established policy procedures were enacted to maintain this continued growth of projects and public funding.

Bill is presently a registered professional engineer in the State of Rhode Island, a member of the Rhode Island Society of Professional Engineers and the National Society of Professional Engineers.

Mr. Speaker, transportation efforts in the Northeast corridor of our country have been greatly enhanced by Bill's efforts here in Rhode Island and I would urge my colleagues to join me in saluting this outstanding public servant upon his retirement.

DEMOCRACY AND HUMAN RIGHTS FOR KOSOVO

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, on February 3 numerous dignitaries from around the world attended the National Prayer Breakfast here in Washington. Among those dignitaries and officials was Dr. Ibrahim Rugova, who represents the predominantly Albanian population of Kosovo, one of the regions lying within the borders of the former Yugoslavia.

In elections held by the Albanian majority, Dr. Rugova was overwhelmingly supported for the Presidency of Kosovo. In that capacity, he delivered a statement here on Capitol Hill to Members and others who share an interest in the events taking place in Kosovo and the rest of the former Yugoslavia.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert at this point in the RECORD Dr. Rugova's statement on the situation in Kosovo. I am hopeful that it will assist my colleagues in understanding events in the southern Balkans and the aspirations of the ethnic Albanian residents of Kosovo for democracy and human rights.

STATEMENT BY DR. IBRAHIM RUGOVA, PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF KOSOVA

I wish to express my sincere appreciation for the active concern shown by the US Administration in the tragic situation in our Republic. At the same time, we feel constrained to emphasize the following points:

The situation in Kosova is ready to explode. Since the refusal by Belgrade authorities to permit the operation of the CSCE long-term monitoring mission in our territory, repression has increased significantly. Over the past months human rights abuses have grown even worse. There are numerous well-documented instances of arbitrary arrests followed by torture, which have resulted in several deaths in the last five months. The people of Kosova are faced with a campaign of "quiet" ethnic cleansing by the Belgrade regime. Arrests, torture, and intimidation are coupled with a campaign to disenfranchise the Albanian people within their own homeland. The already grave situation is furthermore burdened with a heavy presence of police, military, paramilitary, and various armed gangs from Serbia hovering all over Kosova.

With the expulsion of international monitoring the people of Kosova now feel abandoned by the international community. For them, the only option left seems to be leave their homeland or an urgent need for concrete international support. Unless the international community, guided by US leadership, acts in a decisive manner, instability in Kosova will rapidly transform itself into an open and ever-widening conflict. Such a conflict will lead to massive bloodshed. It will be impossible to control and it may well result in widespread hostilities among states in the region, possibly even involving NATO members. Rather than waiting for such a horrendous outcome, it is essential to act now, while it is still possible to influence events. We believe that the following actions should be taken by the United States government.

The United States should restate its pledge that an armed intervention of the Belgrade government in Kosova would be met with a decisive US military response:

The United States should press for the reestablishment of the CSCE long-term monitoring mission in Kosova;

The United States should press for a United Nations protectorate and for the deployment of a UN preventive force in Kosova, including a human rights component with a mandate to monitor developments, assist in the process of restoring local control over state institutions, and preclude human rights violations;

The United States should press for serious dialogue between the Kosova authorities and the Belgrade government, with a view to achieving a peaceful solution towards the realization of the rights of the people of Kosova. Such dialogue must be supported by more vigorous international involvement;

The United States should seek confirmation in the UN Security Council of the fact that the removal of sanctions against Serbia cannot be contemplated until the situation concerning Kosova has been resolved.

Mr. Doley was the overwhelming winner in 1989.

Mr. Doley, who continues to serve as Chairman of Doley Securities, Inc., has appeared as a guest on CNBC, CNN, FNN, the Today Show, Nightly Business Report, Wall Street Week, and has been featured in the New York Times Sunday financial section and in U.S. News and World Report.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join with Mr. Doley's family and colleagues in the business and financial community in saluting him on his two decades of outstanding achievements as a member of the New York Stock Exchange. I join with them in wishing him continued success.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO RESTORE STATES RIGHTS TO MEDICAID ABORTION FUNDING

HON. JAY DICKEY

OF ARKANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. DICKEY. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation to reverse recently enunciated policy of the Department of Health and Human Services [HHS] to require States to use Medicaid funds for abortions in cases of rape or incest, even in States whose constitutions or laws forbid abortion funding for those purposes. Arkansas is one of those State.

I agree with and voted for the modified Hyde amendment last year in the Department of Health and Human Services appropriations bill, to allow taxpayer funding of abortions for poor women in cases of rape and incest. However, that amendment contained no language to require States to fund such abortions if it is contrary to State law. Nor did the modified Hyde amendment provide the States with additional Federal funding for those purposes.

Nonetheless, last December, the Clinton administration issued an interpretation of the modified Hyde amendment to require, rather than allow, States to use public funds to pay for abortions in cases of rape, incest, or danger to the mother's life. This low-key policy change, retroactive to October 1, 1993, appeared first in newspapers. This is where many of the State Medicaid Directors learned of the change. Ray Hanley, the Arkansas State Medicaid Director, first learned of the change after reading about it in the newspaper. Subsequently, the new guidelines were quietly faxed to each State Medicaid director.

The letter, dated December 28, 1993—Congress was out of session, the President was on vacation—was signed by Sally K. Richardson, the Director of the Medicaid Bureau, Health Care Financing Administration. The letter directed States to pay for abortions for low-income women in cases of rape or incest.

Ms. Richrdson's order also contained a quirky little provision that interpreted the Hyde amendment to allow an abortion provider to suspend any State requirement that the rape or incest be reported to law enforcement officers. At least five States have such reporting requirements. The Hyde amendment includes no mention of reporting requirements.

This HHS policy change is in conflict with the laws and constitutions of at least 36 States. Arkansas is one State that specifically prohibits State public financed abortions in cases of rape or incest, amendment 66 to the Arkansas Constitution.

In a letter dated December 30, 1993, the State Medicaid Directors' Association, chaired by Ray Hanley of Arkansas, expressed its strong objection to HHS's new interpretation of the law. The letter characterized the interpretation as an unfunded mandate in clear violation of President Clinton's pledge to reduce unfunded mandates. Several State Medicaid Directors, including those from Arkansas, Utah, Pennsylvania, Colorado, and South Dakota, have also written in protest. State refusal to obey the administration's edict threatens future Federal matching funds.

On January 19, 1994, Representative HENRY HYDE issued a news release stating that "there is no basis in the 'Hyde amendment' for the recent Clinton administration decree that 37 States must rewrite their laws limiting State-funded abortions." Other Congressional leaders, such as Senate Minority Leader BOB DOLE, on January 7, 1994, have said that Congress should look into the question of whether the congressional intent of the Hyde amendment was to require all States to pay for Medicaid abortions for low-income women in cases of rape or incest.

My legislation provides that opportunity. My legislation reverses the HHS interpretation of the modified Hyde amendment by allowing, not requiring, States to use Medicaid funds to pay for abortions for poor women in cases of rape and incest, as well as to protect the life of the mother.

I hope my colleagues, especially those from the States that prohibit such funding or have reporting requirements, will join me in this effort to reverse this unfortunate HHS interpretation of the modified Hyde amendment. Your support will support States rights; support funding of Federal mandates on the States; and support proper administrative procedures in changing public policy.

AMERICAN HEART MONTH

HON. MIKE SYNAR

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. SYNAR. Mr. Speaker, I am enclosing the proclamation signed by President William J. Clinton on February 3, 1994, which designates February as American Heart Month.

A PROCLAMATION

The heart is one of nature's most efficient and durable machines. During an average lifetime, the heart contracts an amazing 2.5 billion times. Although we now realize that it functions as a life-giving pump, the human heart was thought of by ancient man as the very soul of one's being. Certain words, such as "courage" and "cordial," are derived from the Latin word for heart, symbolizing prominence and significance.

Heart disease was not recognized until about 1500 A.D., for the heart was considered so delicate and sensitive that death was believed to be inevitable if the heart were injured in any way. Although most causes of heart disease observed early in the 20th century are still present today, the treatment and cures of the diseases are now dramatically altered.

Today, heart disease is one health threat that Americans can conquer. Extraordinary scientific advances, together with increased public awareness, have forged one of this century's greatest medical achievements, saving untold lives through improved prevention and treatment. However, as long as cardiovascular diseases and stroke threaten the lives of Americans, we must continue in our diligent efforts to fight these diseases.

Today, many Americans are joining in this fight by taking steps to reduce their changes of developing a cardiovascular disease. They have learned to avoid the major risk factors by controlling blood pressure and blood cholesterol, by avoiding tobacco products, and by becoming more physically active.

At the same time, scientists are developing better ways to detect and treat cardiovascular diseases and stroke. Revolutionary advances are reducing the physical suffering exacted by heart disease and are making diagnosis and treatment more successful.

The Federal Government has contributed to these achievements by supporting research and public education through its National Heart, Lung, and Blood Institute. The American Heart Association, through its research and education programs and its vital network of dedicated volunteers, has played a crucial role in bringing about these remarkable accomplishments.

The results of the many scientific and public education achievements are dramatic. From 1972 through 1990, the death rate from heart disease dropped 39 percent and the death rate from strokes fell 57.4 percent.

However, these advances have not yet eradicated the devastating consequences of heart disease, which remains the leading cause of death in the United States today. American men and women still suffer about 1.25 million heart attacks each year. About 50 million Americans still have high blood pressure—and uncontrolled high blood pressure is a major cause of stroke. Virtually every American has grieved for a relative or friend debilitated or killed by a cardiovascular disease or stroke.

In recognition of the need for all of us to become involved in the ongoing fight against cardiovascular diseases, the Congress, by Joint Resolution approved December 30, 1963 (77 Stat. 843; 38 U.S.C. 169b), has requested that the President issue an annual proclamation designating February as "American Heart Month."

Now, therefore, I, William J. Clinton, President of the United States of America, do hereby proclaim the month of February 1994 as American Heart Month. I invite the Governors of the States, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, officials of other areas subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, and the American people to join me in reaffirming our commitment to combating cardiovascular diseases and stroke.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand this third day of February, in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and ninety-four, and of the Independence of the United States of America the two hundred and eighteenth.

WILLIAM J. CLINTON.

TRIBUTE TO BERNICE SHOFFNER WILEY

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, I want to recognize the numerous achievements of Mrs. Bernice Shoffner Wiley. Bernice is a distinguished graduate of North Carolina A&T State University. She received her master's in nutrition from NYU.

Bernice is a former principal for a junior high school in Brooklyn. As the director for Reimburseable Programs in District 17, she was responsible for administering a budget in excess of $7 million for educationally disadvantaged students.

For the past 9 years, she has served as the principal of P.S. 289. Under her leadership, the academic performance of schools within the district have dramatically improved. She and her staff have been recognized by city officials and the Federal Government for excellence in education. In 1993, Bernice was designated as the superintendent for District 17.

Bernice and her husband Albert have two children, a son, Albert Jr., and a daughter, Courtney. Bernice is a member of the Deaconess Board of the Concord Baptist Church of Christ. I am honored and pleased to recognize Bernice Shoffner Wiley.

NATIONAL WILD BIRD FEEDING MONTH

HON. JOHN EDWARD PORTER

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to recognize February, one of the most difficult months in the United States for wild birds, as National Wild Bird Feeding Month. During this month, individuals are encouraged to provide food, water, and shelter to help wild birds survive. This assistance benefits the environment by supplementing wild bird's natural diet of weed seeds and insects. Currently, one-third of the U.S. adult population feeds wild birds in their backyards.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, backyard bird feeding is an entertaining, educational, and inexpensive pastime enjoyed by children and adults. Bird feeding provides a needed break from today's frantic lifestyles. Adults enjoy the relaxation and peacefulness afforded by watching birds—nature serves to relieve the stress and can get one's day going on a tranquil note.

Young children are naturally drawn to the activities involved in feeding wild birds, which can serve as excellent educational tools. Children can identify different species of birds with a field guide and can learn about the birds' feeding and living habits. These observations can then provide excellent research opportunities for school projects and reports.

Feeding wild birds in the backyard is an easy hobby to start and need not overtax the family budget. It can be as simple as mounting a single feeder outside a window and filling it with bird seed mix. For many people, the hobby progresses from there. They discover the relationship between the type and location of feeders, and the seeds offered in them, and the number and varieties of birds attracted. Parents can challenge an inquisitive child's mind as they explore together these factors in trying to encourage visits by their favorite birds.

DEMOGRAPHY AND TECHNOLOGY TIME BOMB

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. BAKER of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to share with my colleagues a poignant article by Mr. Thomas Loarie, from my hometown of Danville, CA. Mr. Loarie's article, entitled "Demography and Technology Time Bomb," appeared in the Wall Street Journal of February 16, 1994.

In the article, Mr. Loarie warns against just one of the dangers of President Clinton's health care plan—that of the stifling of new medical technologies. Instead of causing health care costs to rise, medical research and development will actually bring costs down. More efficient and less intrusive surgical techniques will reduce the length of a hospital stay in some instances.

We have the best health care system in the world. We must not prevent the crucial research and development that will allow it to continue to improve.

[From the Wall Street Journal, Feb. 16, 1994]

DEMOGRAPHY AND TECHNOLOGY TIME BOMB

(By Thomas M. Loarie)

In its quest to squeeze savings from the health care system, the Clinton health care plan threatens to put a chokehold on the single greatest source of efficiency and productivity: medical technology.

This is shortsighted because in less than a decade, the baby-boom generation will begin entering the peak years of health care consumption. The need for efficient, labor-saving, resource-stretching tools to handle the boomers' health care needs will be greater than ever.

But perhaps the administration already knows this and chooses to ignore it. As a developer of medical technology, I know that the Clinton plan's impact on technology innovation will not be widely felt for about 10 years. This is roughly the time-line for a new medical device to go through development, testing and evaluation by the Food and Drug Administration.

Health care is the one industry where, erroneously, technological advances tend to be viewed as burdens, not solutions. But medical technology prices increased at an average annual rate of 2.9% between 1985 and 1992, vs. the 3.1% rate in the primary index of producer prices throughout the U.S. economy, according to the Health Care Technology Institute in Alexandria, Va. This is despite the rapid rate of medical technology innovation during that period, a period that saw seismic changes in the way health care is delivered.

Development of less invasive surgical technologies, for instance, helped drive the trend toward outpatient surgery, which now constitutes nearly 60% of all hospital-based procedures. One of the most important of these technologies, laparoscopy, was considered an exotic idea when introduced in the late 1970s for a small population of infertile couples desiring pregnancy. Since then, spinoff technologies have made its applications widespread.

The savings that come from such innovation are often ignored. Prior to 1989, for example, it cost about $21,000 plus six days in a hospital to have a gall bladder removed by conventional surgery. Today, a laparoscopic procedure performed in an ambulatory surgery center can accomplish the same thing for about $6,400.

Labor costs, which account for 80% of health care spending, are the true wild card, yet they are not addressed in the reform plan. Another wild card is over-utilization of technology that occurs at the direction of physicians, hospitals and consumers themselves. Here the Clinton plan proposes to attack the problem by ensnaring medical technology makers in the same bureaucratic net as technology users. This is like cooling down the pace of telecommunications innovation as a national strategy for dealing with teenagers' overuse of their parents' telephones.

If the health care system fails to fully exploit technology's leveraging capacity, the needs and demands of an aging population will either bust the nation's treasury or require unnecessary, if not politically unacceptable, rationing.

Since coming under the regulatory purview of the FDA in 1976, our industry has undergone a series of ever-tightening R&D controls and product requirements. A three- to five-year FDA review process that was in force when my company started in 1986 is now a five- to seven-year process, which extends the full R&D cycle for many companies to 10 years or more. As a result, costs associated with surviving the FDA new product gauntlet have grown substantially higher, while potential returns have been further deferred.

The chilling effect of the administration's plans for health care spending caps can be seen by almost every leading health care analyst on Wall Street. Their nearly unanimous evaluation is that medical technology companies are among the "big losers" in the Clinton plan. Uncertainties over how new technologies will be assessed, how prices will be set, and how global budgets will affect new technologies over the long term have added measurably to the risk of investment.

It is fantasy for Washington to think medical technology investors have unlimited reserves of courage and patience. A bureaucratic scheme that makes irrelevant such foundational concepts as market research, pricing strategies and product-development timelines may be just the thing to steer investors into less precarious pursuits, along such lines as oil drilling or perhaps gold prospecting.

The president's plan puts the brakes on new advances that might otherwise be there to serve aging boomers like the Clintons, at a moment when the health care system will be put to its strongest test yet.

HEALTH CARE REFORM JOB PRESERVATION ACT

HON. DEAN A. GALLO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. GALLO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to ask my colleagues to support a bill that I am introducing jointly with our distinguished colleague, Representative JAN MEYERS from Kansas—the Health Care Reform Jobs Preservation Act.

Too frequently, Members of Congress pass legislation without knowing what impact these changes will have on U.S. jobs. As Congress begins reforming our health care system, it is imperative that Members of Congress and the President be fully informed of the impact any health care reform measure will have on U.S. jobs.

That is why I am introducing this legislation—to provide Members of Congress and the President with information at least as important as whether a payroll tax should be on or off budget, and that is "how will reforming the health care system impact American workers."

The bill states that before any comprehensive health care reform takes effect a job impact study will be done by CBO and OMB determining the effect of health care reform on job loss or gain, impact on jobs requiring lesser levels of education or skill, shifts from full-time to part-time employment, and a decrease in wages or salaries.

I plan to offer this bill as an amendment to any health care reform plan considered in the House this session, because without a stable job base health care reform will fail.

In 1991, Congress passed legislation to raise the luxury tax on boats without information on how the increase would impact boating industry jobs. Not until virtually killing this industry did Congress, 18 months after it was enacted, repeal the luxury tax. In that short time, thousands of skilled American jobs were lost to other countries, and the tax even failed to raise anywhere near the revenue that was promised by supporters.

I fear a repeat of the luxury tax nightmare, but this time, in an area of our economy as large as health care, it would be even more disastrous.

I am asking this critical question because we cannot act in good conscience on reform without an answer to what will happen to American workers—and they deserve to know the truth. We know, for instance, that when you overtax small businesses, investment capital to these important job-generating companies dries up, leaving no alternative but to lay people off.

The Congressional Budget Office routinely assesses the impact of new laws on revenues, but the same importance is not afforded to jobs impact. As we learned with the boat tax, no revenue estimate is complete without the knowledge of who will lose their jobs if Congress makes the wrong decision.

Mr. Speaker, health care reform will affect every American in one way or another and Americans deserve to know the truth. Unless we pass my legislation, we risk blindly moving forward with legislation that could put hundreds of thousands of Americans out of work.

I urge my colleagues to cosponsor the Health Care Reform Preservation Act so that Congress and the President will be fully aware of possible job loss and shifts in reforming the health care system.

TRIBUTE TO RUTH A. WILLIAMS

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to familiarize my colleagues with Ms. Ruth A. Williams, a dedicated community service worker.

Ms. Williams has been actively involved in her community for a number of years. She has devoted a great deal of time to the New York Lioness Club. As a Lioness, Williams has held positions as chapter president, director, and membership chairperson of the East New York Lioness Club. She organized and founded 14 Lioness Clubs, and is responsible for establishing the first Lioness District, and District Convention in the State of New York.

As a Lioness, Ruth has held the position of zone chairman for two consecutive years. She is also a former regional chairperson, lieutenant governor, and cabinet secretary-treasurer in her district. Ms. Williams has been commended on her endeavors. She has received a number of awards including, Lions International Extension Award, Lioness of the Year Award, International President Banker, Certificate of Appreciation, and 100 Percent Attendance Award.

Ruth is also an active member in other community organizations. She is presently a member of the Laurencian Guild of St. Lawrence Parish, and a troop leader for the Girl Scouts.

I salute Ruth Williams for her fine accomplishments as a community activist and a member of the Lioness Clubs.

ESTABLISHING OFFICES OF WOMEN'S HEALTH WITHIN THE PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

HON. OLYMPIA J. SNOWE

OF MAINE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. Speaker, today I introduce the Women's Health Offices Act, a bill which I previously introduced, as part of the Women's Health Equity Act. Just as there was a need for the statutory creation of an Office of Women's Health Research at the National Institutes of Health, I believe that there is a need for additional women's health offices. This bill would establish women's health offices within the Public Health Service and at the Food and Drug Administration, the Agency for Health Care Policy and Research, the Health Resources and Services Administration, and Centers for Disease Control.

Women's health concerns need to be addressed nationally at the highest levels of government. A recent, as yet, unpublished survey concluded that physicians are more than twice as likely to perceive that the same disease affects men more seriously than women. A study by the Commonwealth Fund found that more women than men failed to receive the care they need and that in the past year, about one-third of the women surveyed did not have any basic preventive services: a Pap smear, a clinical breast exam, a pelvic exam, or a complete physical exam. Women also reported greater communications problems with their physicians. The survey found that women lack the information they need, and they are not getting it from their doctors. They are not linking at-risk behavior and disease. Another recent study conducted by the Centers for Disease Control concluded that about 84 percent of American women think that they will not contract sexually transmitted diseases, although 13 million cases are contracted annually in this country. As with other diseases, women often are undiagnosed for a long period of time. This not only complicates treatment and recovery, but often proves fatal.

For the diseases that are not preventable, early discovery greatly increases a woman's chance of survival. It improves the quality of her life and that of her family. For the diseases that are preventable, communication programs and education leading to prevention is vital. Short of eradication, early diagnosis and treatment are the keys to survival.

Women have been shortchanged. There are no textbook descriptions of the disease that is their number one killer—heart disease, and they are more than twice as likely as men to die after a heart attack. There is no known cause for breast cancer, the second leading cause of cancer deaths among women. Until recently, there was no mandate that they be included in clinical trials despite the fact that their physiology is distinct from men and they react to drugs differently. There is a desperate need to address these discrepancies in women's health.

This legislation would provide for short and long-range goals and coordination of all activities that relate to disease prevention, health promotion, delivery of health services, and scientific research concerning women. By statutorily creating offices of women's health, the new Deputy Assistant Secretary for Women's Health would be able to better monitor various Public Health Service agencies and advise on scientific, legal, ethical, and policy issues. Agencies would establish a coordinating committee on women's health with the director of each office as chair and identify and prioritize which women's health projects should be conducted. This would provide a mechanism for coordination, with each agency, among agencies and with the voluntary and corporate sector. This bill would require reports to the main women's health office culminating in a report by the Secretary to appropriate committees of Congress describing the actions taken during the preceding years and would appropriate such sums as necessary for fiscal years 1994 through 1996.

I urge my colleagues to support the Women's Health Offices Act. We all know there are deficiencies in communication, education, research, and services relating to women's health. Now is the time to prescribe a remedy and act. By providing offices of women's health in the Public Health Service, you would be ensuring that the health concerns of a majority of your constituents are being addressed.

NEW HOPE CANCER FOUNDATION

HON. DON SUNDQUIST

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. SUNDQUIST. Mr. Speaker, I rise to share with my colleagues the ambitious and noble efforts of the New Hope Cancer Foundation of Memphis, TN, which is working to build bridges between the American medical community and those of the New Independent States of the former Soviet Union.

The New Hope Cancer Foundation, in conjunction with the Oblast of Pskov, Russia, is working to design and develop a model cancer treatment complex there. Funded through private donations and government grants in aid, the center will serve patients in a 200-kilometer area. Ultimately, it will be a 200-bed hospital and outpatient treatment center serving children and adults, and patterned after successful centers such as the St. Jude's Research Center in Memphis.

The New Hope Cancer Center will be a model for others in the New Independent States. I salute the initiative of those working to make this center a reality, and I share with them a belief in its promise and potential.

STATEMENT ON POLICY TOWARD NEW ZEALAND

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I welcome the administration's decision last Friday, February 18, to restore senior-level contacts between United States officials and their New Zealand counterparts for discussion on political, strategic and broad security issues.

Restrictions on New Zealand officials' access to the executive branch date back to 1987, when New Zealand adopted antinuclear legislation preventing U.S. Navy vessels and military aircraft from visiting New Zealand. The policy of keeping senior New Zealand officials at arms length since that time has had no impact of New Zealand's antinuclear stance. Nor has it served any other identifiable U.S. interest.

Despite its continuing differences with the United States on nuclear issues, New Zealand is a friendly country that shares United States values and has similar approaches to the United States on many issues. In recent years New Zealand has played an active and positive role on international issues of importance to the United States. Cases in point are its current participation in the Security Council, its contribution to U.N. peacekeeping operations and its strong support for the Asia Pacific Economic Cooperation forum.

In this post cold war period, when multilateral effort and burden-sharing are so important, maintaining restrictions on New Zealand's access to United States officials was no longer appropriate.

The increased contact with New Zealand that will now occur will help ensure that the United States continues to have New Zealand's support on important issues. By encouraging greater bilateral dialog, it could also contribute to an eventual resolution of the differences between us in the defense and security area.

TRIBUTE TO BISHOP GORMAN HIGH SCHOOL

HON. JAMES H. BILBRAY

OF NEVADA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. BILBRAY. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to honor 40 years of educational excellence in southern Nevada. Bishop Gorman High School, the only Catholic high school in southern Nevada, will celebrate the beginning of their 40th anniversary year at the 12th annual Knight of the Gael on March 16, 1994.

Gorman High is an institution in southern Nevada. Over 6,350 students have graduated from Gorman since 1957. This accredited school offers students of all racial, national, and ethnic background strong academic curriculum and college preparatory programs. In addition, the spirit of community and friendship instilled at Gorman has made it extraordinary since doors were opened September 7, 1954.

Students and faculty are important parts of Bishop Gorman High. Graduates have gone on to serve with distinction in most every discipline. Members of Gorman's faculty have been recognized for excellence on many occasions. In fact, 73 percent of the current faculty have at least a master's degree. To be sure, the students and teachers through the years at Bishop Gorman High have formed a bond that benefits each other as well as the community.

Students and teachers, however, only make up part of the educational team at Gorman. The clerics of St. Viator—an order of priests headquartered in the great State of Illinois—have administered Bishop Gorman High School from the beginning. The late Fr. Francis Williams, the late Fr. Harold Devereaux, Fr. Phillip Clifford, the late Fr. William Anson, the late Fr. John Shiels, Fr. Edward Anderson, Fr. Lawrence White, Fr. George Harris, Fr. Charles Bolser, and Fr. Richard Rinn have all brought inspirational leadership to Gorman High School. These former principals deserve recognition and a hearty Thank You.

I ask my colleagues to join me in recognizing the contribution of these gentleman in making Bishop Gorman High School an outstanding institution and wishing the Bishop Gorman community a happy and fruitful 40th anniversary year!

TUSKEGEE AIRMEN HONORED

HON. SHERROD BROWN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the Tuskegee Airmen, on the occasion of their 50th anniversary.

Due to the rigid pattern of racial segregation that prevailed in the United States during World War II, 966 black military aviators were trained at an isolated training complex near the town of Tuskegee, AL. Four hundred and fifty black fighter pilots under the command of Col. Benjamin O. Davis, Jr., fought in the aerial war over North Africa, Sicily, and Europe. These gallant men flew 15,553 sorties and completed 1,578 missions with the 12th Tactical U.S. Army Air Force and the 15th Strategic U.S. Army Air Force. Colonel Davis later became the U.S. Air Force's first black general and later rose to the rank of lieutenant.

These airmen were called the Schwartze Vogelmenschen—Black Birdmen—by the Germans, who both feared and respected them. White American bomber crews reverently referred to them as "The Black Redtail Angels" because of the identifying red paint on their tail assemblies and because of their reputation for not losing bombers to enemy fighters.

The 99th Fighter Squadron, which had already distinguished itself over North Africa, Sicily, and Anzio, joined three other black squadrons: the 100th, the 301st, and the 302d. These four squadrons, designated as the 332d Fighter Group, comprised the largest fighter unit in the 15th Air Force. Sixty-six of these pilots were killed in aerial combat while another 32 were either forced down or shot down and captured to become prisoners of war. These black airmen came home with 150 Distinguished Flying Crosses, Legions of Merit, and the Red Star of Yugoslavia.

Other black pilots, navigators, bombardiers, and crewmen who were trained for medium bombardment duty were joined by 332d combat returnees and formed into the 477th composite Fighter-Bomber Group (B–52's and P–47's). This group never entered combat because of the surrender of Germany and Japan in 1945. Significantly, the 477th's demands for parity and recognition as competent military professionals combined with the magnificent wartime record of the 99th and the 332d led to a review of the U.S. War Department's racial policies.

For every black pilot there were 10 other civilian or military black men and women on ground support duty. Many of these men and women remained in the military service during the post-World War II era and spearheaded the integration of the armed forces of the United States with their integration into the U.S. Air Force in 1949.

Nearly 30 years of anonymity were ended in 1972 with the founding of Tuskegee Airmen, Inc., at Detroit, MI. Organized as a nonmilitary and nonprofit entity, Tuskegee Airmen, Inc., exists primarily to motivate and inspire young Americans to become participants in our Nation's society and its democratic process. In addition TAI's National Scholarship Fund awards scholarship grants across the Nation to young men and women who wish to pursue careers in aviation or aerospace industry.

With a growing number of chapters located in major cities throughout the United States, Europe, and in Japan, the membership of Tuskegee Airmen, Inc., is made up, principally, of veterans of the armed forces and active duty personnel representing all the branches of the military. It also includes a growing number of civilians who demonstrate sincere interest in helping the organization achieve its goals and objectives. All officers and directors of the organization serve without salary or fee.

Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride that I ask you and my fellow Members of Congress to join me in recognizing the Tuskegee Airmen. As they celebrate their 50-year anniversary, let us remember the important contributions these individuals have made to the history of our country.

TRIBUTE TO HELEN L. WELLS

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, it is gratifying to introduce my colleagues to Helen L. Wells. Helen Wells is a native of Clayton, LA. She obtained her bachelor of arts degree from Long Island University. She subsequently acquired a master's of arts and a law degree from the State University of New York at Buffalo.

During the 1960's, Helen played an active role in the Civil Rights Movement in Natchez, MS. After receiving her law degree, she served as a community legal service community volunteer for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People [NAACP]. As a volunteer, Ms. Wells offered free legal advice to members of the Concord Baptist Church, as well as members of the Rosetta Gaston Democratic Club.

Helen also should be recognized for her active participation with the Concord Baptist Church, the Association Board of Regents at Long Island College Hospital, the Kings County Bar Association, the New York State Bar Association, and the New York State Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers. She has also held the positions of administrative law judge for the Department of Social Service for the State of New York, and the Environmental Control Board of the city of New York.

Since 1982, Helen Wells has practiced law at her Brooklyn office where she handles cases in Federal, State, and city court.

IN HONOR OF DAVID R. YOUNG

HON. LYNN C. WOOLSEY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to David R. Young of Sonoma, CA.

I offer great thanks and heartfelt appreciation for Mr. Young's contribution to educating the children of Marin and Sonoma Counties about HIV, the virus that leads to AIDS.

Living with the HIV and knowing only too well how the disease was robbing him of his days, David, with the full support of his life partner, Douglas Pinter, nevertheless sacrificed many of those precious remaining days to helping our children avoid becoming infected with HIV.

While we may never know exactly how many children's lives David has saved, we know it is many, and even if he saved only one, we will be eternally grateful for his gift to our community. It is more precious than gold.

Thank you, David. Godspeed and comfort in the days to come.

INTRODUCTION OF THE FEDERAL RESEARCH INFORMED CONSENT ACT

HON. JIM COOPER

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, when the Secretary of Energy, Hazel O'Leary, announced the Department's openness initiatives in December, few of us imagined exactly what the declassification of documents would reveal. How could we possibly imagine that the Department of Energy would find that the Federal Government sponsored radiation experiments on American citizens during the cold war—that Americans have been used as guinea pigs without their consent?

It shocked me. It shocked my colleagues. It shocked many of my constituents in the State of Tennessee, where many of the radiation experiments were conducted. We were all alarmed at the thought that American citizens were exposed to radiation without their consent, and that some may have suffered serious health problems as a result.

Since Secretary O'Leary's announcement, I have received calls and letters from across Tennessee. People are panicked—afraid that they or members of their family may have been used as subjects in the cold war radiation experiments. These people have asked that I assure them of two things: first, that the Federal Government will provide full information to unwitting participants in the past experiments; and second, that American citizens will not be used as guinea pigs again.

The Secretary of Energy has testified to several congressional committees that the Clinton administration is determined to disclose all records relating to the experiments in question. I intend to hold the administration to that promise. The Secretary also committed to a review of current experimentation involving human exposure to radiation. I applaud that effort as well. There has been no attempt, however, to ensure that the Federal Government may never use its citizens as unknowing subjects again.

In seeking to provide that assurance to the people I met in Tennessee, I tried to find a Federal statute that prohibited the use of humans as subjects in experiments without their informed consent. I was surprised to find that none exists—there are regulations, but they leave a great deal of discretion in the hands of Federal agency heads.

The regulations have done a good job of protecting human subjects in the last decade. The United States is among the world leaders in the regulation of human experimentation. The chance that Americans could be subjected to radiation experiments without their knowledge today is small. When we are dealing with the health and welfare of American citizens, however, small is not small enough. I think that we should go that extra mile to protect people—a statutory ban on the use of humans in federally sponsored experiments without their consent would provide that extra protection.

Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing the Federal Research Informed Consent Act. This legislation establishes a statutory requirement of informed consent in Federal research using human subjects. It centralizes authority over such experiments at the Department of Health and Human Services, and requires the Secretary of that Department to notify the Congress of any exemptions made. In short, it creates an oversight mechanism that will protect the American public.

I hope that never again are American citizens violated by their own Government. I think that this legislation will ensure that. We can never project into the future, however. That is why I have included a provision in this bill to provide legal remedy for individuals whose right to informed consent is violated. Americans have confidence in their Government, and most assume that their Government will not subject them to harm. If the Government abuses that relationship, citizens are entitled to recover.

Mr. Speaker, I introduce the Federal Research Informed Consent Act today to provide American citizens with renewed confidence in the relationship they have with their Government. The experiments revealed by the Department of Energy have troubled us all. We must ensure that such a terrible chapter in our Nation's history cannot be repeated. I encourage my colleagues to give serious consideration to this legislation, and hope that they will offer their support.

RACISM

HON. BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Speaker, again I must rise to speak out against racism. Last Wednesday night, February 16, 1994, members of the Hagerstown Moose Lodge overwhelmingly, by a 52–19 vote, rejected a black man's application for membership.

Moose International has close to 2 million members. The Hagerstown Moose Lodge has about 8,000 members, making it the largest Moose Lodge in the world.

This Hagerstown lodge vote indicates that hatred and bigotry are still prevalent in our communities and in our country. Discrimination by private clubs on the basis of race, religion, or gender should be denounced by all people. The public should not sit idle and accept such racist actions.

We must all continue to condemn such racism. Prejudicial actions, just like hate speech, cannot be tolerated in our society.

A SALUTE TO FATHER SVETOZAR KRALJEVIC, O.F.M.

HON. PETER T. KING

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to submit for the RECORD, a salute to Father Svetozar Kraljevic, O.F.M., prepared by Ted Conlin of St. Brigid's Parish of Westbury, NY.

Father Kraljevic, a Roman Catholic priest of the Franciscan Order, and native of Bosnia and Herzegovina, has done much to help alleviate the suffering of the people of that tragically, war-torn region.

Mr. Conlin movingly tells Father Kraljevic's story of compassion and courage. Having traveled to Bosnia and Herzegovina last year, I understand the suffering that Father Kraljevic has seen.

Last spring, I took part in a week-long mission to the Balkans with my fellow members of the Balkan Crisis Task Force. Our itinerary included stops in Croatia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Kosova, and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia. Our delegation met with government officials, toured refugee camps and hospitals and received detailed briefings on the military situation in the Balkans.

At a meeting with Serbian Government officials, I personally confronted Serbian Vice President Zoran Arndjelovic on his Government's complicity in atrocities against Bosnian Moslem civilians. These crimes against humanity are the result of the heinous policy of ethnic cleansing, the genocidal program driving the creation of a greater Serbia.

I have long been in support of decisive action to halt the march of Serbian aggression, stop the genocide, and give the oppressed the means of defending themselves. This is the only way to stop the slaughter. Above all, those guilty of war crimes must be brought to justice and made to pay for their crimes against humanity.

Unfortunately, the killing and suffering continues in the former Yugoslavia. The following account of Father Svetozar Kraljevic's pastoral and relief activities in Bosnia is truly inspiring. His efforts to ease the pain and suffering of all those touched by the war are worthy of our gratitude and admiration. Someday I hope to visit with Father Kraljevic in an independent Bosnia, free from the shadow of war and oppression.

Father Svetozar Kraljevic's story follows:

A doctor tells of an operation which, as a young student, he observed in a London hospital. "It was the first time that this particular brain operation had been carried out in this country. It was performed by one of our leading surgeons upon a young man of great promise for whom, after an accident, there seemed to be no other remedy. It was an operation of the greatest delicacy, in which a small error would have had fatal consequences. In the outcome, the operation was a triumph. But it involved seven hours of intense and uninterrupted concentration on the part of the surgeon. When it was over, a nurse had to take him by the hand, and lead him from the operating theater like a blind man or a little child." This, one might say, is what limitless self-giving is like. It is what people and peoples, individuals and humanity, neighborhoods and nations, must emulate and demonstrate, if today's world is to overcome its chaos, absurdities and lies.

Father Svetozar Kraljevic, a Roman Catholic Priest of the Franciscan order, and native of Bosnia-Hercegovina, in the former Yugoslavia, is just such an individual. Father "Svet", as he is affectionately known by millions, mostly because of his pastoral and relief activities on behalf of all those who suffer in today's war that is the Balkans On Fire, is a man no less remarkable in what means limitless self-giving than that London brain surgeon. Even more, he is remarkable for his humility. He is remarkable for how, in what is an instinctive if not rare humility, he shares himself with the victims of this war. A war that is neither a civil war nor a religious war as some have said but, rather, a land grab by the last of the old-guard communist dictators, Slobodan Milosevic, for a "Greater Serbia" that's been a dream of the Serbs for a hundred years. Too, Father Svet in this war is remarkable for how he leaves a trail of light wherever he goes thus keeping cool, under any confusion from terror and trauma, those to whom he ministers and brings relief supplies.

Here is a man who was born in the mountains of Hercegovina . . . the first reality of his childhood. His parents and his neighbors farmed their slopes and dwelt in their hollows. And when they had to go somewhere, they did not go around; they went over. It would never occur to them to do otherwise, and they expected their children to do the same . . . From Father Svet's earliest recollection, the mountains were a central feature in their lives. "They did not give us much of a living but", says Father Svet, "we did not need much. They, the mountains, taught us to be satisfied with what we had. In a way, they were like parents, they shaped our lives. The other reality was God. Like the mountains, He was just there . . . in my parents prayers, in their plans, in their Sunday worship, an hour's walk away. And so He was there for me too. In the hills, in the trees, in the cows; God was an ever present reality." . . . Father Svet grew up in a one room, dirt floor mountain dwelling built by his father and his father's two brothers. It was after the war and there was total deprivation. The Nazi and the partizani had left no crops, no livestock, nothing. All the people had was a trust in God . . . In his village, there was no school. So at seven his mother walked him over the mountains to the school two kilometers away. The school was one room with benches like pews. The next morning, when it was time to leave for school, Sveto (as he was called at home) stood by the door with his book bag. His mother said, "What are you waiting for?" "I'm waiting for school." "Then why don't you go?" "I'm waiting for you." "You go alone today, Sveto". And so he took his first step into the world alone . . . barefooted, as did many of the mountain children. "When you have nothing," says Father Svet, "parents cannot buy you shoes. My older brother's shoes would not fit me for several years."

After World War II, under Communism the Church posed the only threat. At first, they simply killed the priests. In Hercegovina alone, sixty-nine Franciscans were murdered. Most of the others, including bishops, especially those whose example encouraged the people to keep the faith, were thrown into prison, with the prospect of a limitless sentence, months in solitary confinement, and possible torture. Thus as Svet-the-child took that first step into the world, "alone and barefooted," this was the world he entered, the reality he faced, the persecution he would come to know in a deeply personal and collective way. And years later, when he felt called to the priesthood, he elected to walk in the footsteps of the murdered and imprisoned Franciscans by becoming one of them.

In 1991 Croatia and Slovenia declared independence, as permitted by Yugoslavia's constitution; and then Macedonia; and later, Bosnia-Hercegovina. By radio Father Svet heard the news: Serbs had destroyed a Croatian village . . . while the Yugoslav Army, led by Serbian Communist, looked the other way. Senior Croatian officers in that army were being discharged. The borders were closing. . . . To Father Svet it seemed it would take a miracle to save Croatia—and neighboring Hercegovina—from a bloodbath. The hatred between the Serbs and Croats ran as deep as that between Catholics and Protestants in Northern Ireland, or between Jews and Palestinians in the Holy Land. Present for so long that it was now ingrained in the racial memories of these two peoples, it had been suppressed under Communist rule. But now, the Communists were no longer in power. . . . The next morning after hearing this news, he walked with a friend in a little graveyard behind his retreat house. Pointing out two unmarked graves, he shared that after the war the partizani had come there and killed thirty villagers, after first making them dig those graves. Father Svet knew if there was war, there would be fresh graves. And there would be priests in them . . . yet he had the faith to believe for the miracle of peace. And he shared with his friend the message he had for the leaders of both sides who would be responsible for whatever was coming: "Accountability!" he exclaimed. "Most of them have forgotten—if they ever knew—that they will have to stand before God and answer to Him for every life that he had entrusted into their care, for every drop of blood needlessly shed." . . . Father Svet thought about that for a moment, then said: "The message for the leaders, for the politicians, is the Truth. If they will see the Truth and come to know it, they will do it. And the Truth will set them, and everyone else, free."

The rest now is history. Croatia first and then Bosnia-Hercegovina became a land of shameless slaughter, organized persecution and mass deportation . . . in the style of Hitler and the Khmer Rouge. Indeed it has become the most disgusting war of a century that has had too many. Into this scenario the good Father took the best of his heart, the best of his calm and confidence, the best of his courage, the best of his compassion, and he put them to work on the side of that land's victims, never asking whether they were Croatian, Muslim or Serbian. For going on three years now, Father Svet in his drive to minister and bring relief supplies to this war's victims, he's had to face down a Serb aggressor who, with bestial abandon and no thought for the soul of humanity, has aimed contempt and worse at all of humanity, especially those who would arrest his course and rescue victims, a Serb aggressor who has spat on innocence and crushed, defiled, destroyed whole generations of yesterday, today and tomorrow . . . leaving corpses that clutter the roads, the cries of wounded orphans, the tears of overburdened widows, and over half the children traumatized.

Father Svet has been able to do more than any other of the Franciscan friars because of his involvement with Medjugorje where, in 1981, began the reported appearances daily of the Blessed Virgin Mary. Today, nearly thirteen years later, she still appears and gives inspiration, instructions and messages; including warnings about the future of the world, and unprecedented pleas for a turning to God, prayer, reconciliation, and peace. Medjugorje is located in the Hercegovina sector of Bosnia-Hercegovina. Incredibly, while so much around has been scorched or reduced to rubble, Medjugorje itself, just outside heavily shelled Mostar, has remained untouched and thus become an Oasis of Peace during this war.

Father Svet has traveled far and wide, all over the world, Africa, the United States, Ireland and England organizing and seeking help for his relief efforts. He then personally escorts and leads relief convoys into the war zones and refugee camps, going always to where the suffering is at its worst and danger most extreme. "He just lets himself go," says a brother Franciscan priest, "for our times and for the love of all people . . . in the process exposing himself to danger in efforts that are extremely daring." Recently guaranteed safe passage by both the Serbian and the Muslim forces, the latter now a foe by how the logic of war can make adversaries out of allies, Father Svet made his way to the encircled people of Konjic who were without priests for Christmas, but not without first spending a night with a Serbian commander in the mountains. Very daring, very dangerous. Months ago, while celebrating Mass in his convent at Bijelo Polje, where he served as spiritual adviser for that convent's nearly ninety nuns, a bomb landed in the next room. Through smoke and dark, without lights of any kind, he guided the nuns through gunfire and into the mountains, to safety, and then returned to help others. His convent now a heap of rubble . . . and Father Svet himself, a refugee. Indeed, at one point, for several days, he was listed as "missing", thus alarming millions from round the world who had come to know of him through his association with Medjugorje and his 'round-the-clock relief work in Mostar and elsewhere.

Because it would be Father Svet's wish, it should be pointed out that it is not his life which is being presented here, but rather what God has done in such a life. Thus God, not he, must receive the credit, which is as it should be.

Finally, at a time in history when the world, especially its young people, are in desperate need of role models of the Mother Teresa kind, Father Svet is one man at least who qualifies. Like Mother Teresa, and too that remarkable London "brain surgeon", his "limitless self-giving" on behalf of all who suffer in today's Balkan war is so extraordinary as to merit special mention in public and private meeting places everywhere. For with his life, Father Svet strengthens all of us against suffering, sorrow and frustration. With his life he brings into our lives an Infallible Guide. With his life be brings the consciousness of a global unity in God, a new dependence on that God, a new sense of the brother- and sisterhood of people and peoples. He brings Peace!

We cannot tell what may happen to us in the strange medley of life. But we can decide what happens in us . . . and that is what really counts in the end. How to take the raw stuff of life and make it a thing of worth and beauty . . . that is the test of living. For Father Svet, that raw stuff ranged from the "dirt floor" home of a childhood whose priests were killed, imprisoned and tortured, to the killng fields of Croatia and Bosnia-Hercegovina in war whose course is always horrid. Father Svet, we of St. Brigid's Parish in Westbury, Long Island, New York, salute you! America salutes you!! Clearly we are grateful for all you are and all you do.

REPUBLICAN SUBSTITUTE AMENDMENT TO H.R. 6, THE ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY EDUCATION AMENDMENTS OF 1993

HON. ROBERT H. MICHEL

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, today I have submitted a Republican substitute amendment that may be offered at the end of consideration of H.R. 6, the Elementary and Secondary Education Amendments of 1993. I am submitting this amendment on behalf of myself and the Republican members of the Education and Labor Committee, including Mr. GOODLING, Mr. PETRI, Mrs. ROUKEMA, Mr. GUNDERSON, Mr. ARMEY, Mr. FAWELL, Mr. BALLENGER, Ms. MOLINARI, Mr. BARRETT, Mr. BOEHNER, Mr. CUNNINGHAM, Mr. HOEKSTRA, Mr. MCKEON, Mr. MILLER, and Mr. CASTLE.

Below please find a description of the guiding principles underlying this amendment, as well as a summary of the provisions of the amendment:

21ST CENTURY EXCELLENCE IN EDUCATION ACT—GUIDING PRINCIPLES

Local control: This legislation honors the tradition of local control of education and exemplifies the belief that Federal programs, which supply only 6% of the funds, should to the maximum extent possible defer to educators, parents, and leaders in the community to craft and implement the activities to educate their children.

Flexibility: Since we believe that the best educational programs are those designed at the local level to respond to unique local circumstances, we must give schools the flexibility to adapt Federal programs to their own experiences and needs. In return, the Federal government should demand accountability in the form of improved student learning outcomes.

Bureaucracy and red tape: The demands on the resources and energies of local schools and school districts are great enough without the added burden of excessive Federal paperwork and reporting requirements. Accountability for use of Federal funds should be linked to student learning rather than reams of regulations dictating how money may and may not be spent. Access to Federal funds should be streamlined so that they move quickly and as directly as possible to the schools.

High standards and expectations: For too long we have short-changed our most disadvantaged students by refusing to forcefully declare that they can and must perform as well as other students. Federal programs to aid disadvantaged students must set the same high standards and expectations for them that we have for all other students.

Parental rights: No single factor is more important to student success than parental involvement. Federal education programs should foster parental involvement and access to training. Furthermore, Federal policies should foster greater access to quality education by encouraging approaches such as magnet schools, parental choice and charter schools.

The 21st century: A rapidly changing and increasingly demanding world means the Federal government must assist States and school districts to move toward technology-based education that will meet the demands of the next century.

General: Streamlines the legislation that was reported out of Committee; provides greater flexibility to SEAs and LEAs in the use of Federal funds; eliminates programs that Committee Republicans and the Administration argued do not serve useful purposes;

Title I: Carefully limits provisions and requirements to children served under this Title; the Federal Government is only justified in demanding accountability for those funds it provides.

Establishes an accountability mechanism that requires high standards for students served and assessments of student progress but does not permit the Secretary to dictate or condition the receipt of funds on specific standards or assessments.

Allows hundreds more Title 1 schools to operate schoolwide projects which allows them to combine funds from nearly all ESEA programs to benefit the entire school.

Encourages activities to increase parental involvement and to integrate these with programs such as Even Start and Head Start without specifically directing methods or funding levels.

Allows LEAs to use Chapter 1 funds to develop local option public schools choice programs for students served under this Title.

Establishes programs to recognize successful schools and educators based on student learning improvements, and directs the Secretary to develop a Presidential recognition program to provide cash awards to exceptional schools.

Retains the funding formula carefully worked-out in Committee that protects services to all eligible students, particularly in rural areas, and focuses new funds more on schools with greater concentrations of disadvantaged students.

Eliminates opportunity to learn standards and the unfunded reporting requirements imposed on schools; decisions on the resources and strategies to be employed to educate all of our children are necessarily local matters, and this legislation protects that important prerogative.

Even Start, Migrant Education, and Neglected and Delinquent programs are retained as reported by Committee.

Title II: Retains the Eisenhower Professional Development program but restores greater flexibility by eliminating limits on use of funds for curriculum materials; the provision on teacher certification that concerned home schoolers is stricken.

Restores the Chapter 2 program with the enhanced focus on the National Education Goals contained in the amendment offered by Messrs. Goodling and Gunderson.

Incorporates the Administration's attempt to streamline and consolidate technical assistance efforts and requires that the regional centers develop expertise in assisting schoolwide projects and in better coordinating services provided under a range of programs such as Chapter 1, Even Start, Bilingual Education, etc.

Employs the more realistic technology education program crafted by Messrs. Gunderson, Goodling, and Castle, and provides for a proportionate distribution of such funds between rural and urban districts. Incorporates the Star Schools program as an allowable use of funds under this part.

Directs the Secretary to establish a commission to study and make recommendations about the best ways to assist SEAs and LEAs to move toward technology-based education.

Title III: Incorporates a more flexible version of the Fund for Improvement of Education and adds charter schools as an allowable demonstration project.

Creates a competitive grant program to assist in the planning and implementation of charter schools; in exchange for waivers of restrictive regulations these schools are to develop innovative approaches to raising student achievement.

The Community Arts Partnership Act is folded into Arts in Education as an allowable use of funds.

The Gifted and Talented and Inexpensive Book Distribution programs are retained as reported by Committee.

Title IV: Mr. Barrett's amendments restoring the governors' funds and removing restrictions on contracting out are included in the Drug Free Schools Act.

Titles V, VI, VII: These programs are retained as reported by Committee.

Title VIII: Payments for civilian "B" students are eliminated and the Mink amendment moving funding to the Department of Defense budget is stricken.

Title IX: Waiver language is modified to provide the maximum flexibility at the State and local levels while preserving reasonable assurances for the use of Federal funds.

Title X: Adds language prohibiting the use of funds for family planning and reproductive services.

National Center for Education Statistics: Preserves the National Assessment Governing Board to assure that policy-makers and the public have a voice in shaping the assessments used to measure student progress.

H.R. 3875, THE PRIVATE PROPERTY OWNERS BILL OF RIGHTS INTRODUCED

HON. DON YOUNG

OF ALASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to join with Representative BILLY TAUZIN and a broad-based bipartisan group of Members to introduce the "Private Property Owners Bill of Rights."

Government trying to take private property for their use without paying for it is not new. The first recorded attempt at a "taking" occurs in the Bible, 1st Kings, chapter 21. King Ahab wanted Naboth's farm but he would not sell it to the King. So Queen Jezebel by official decree ordered Naboth stoned to death. And Ahab had his farm.

The main difference between this story and what is happening today under section 404 is, in the biblical story, the government at least tried to buy the land before they put poor Naboth to death. Today in many of the wetlands cases and an increasing number of endangered species cases the Government is simply taking land for public purposes without paying for it.

You may ask why is the concept of private property so important? In my opinion it is the concept of private property and respect of property rights that is one of the cornerstones of our free and democratic society. As the writer L.H. Rockwell said in the "Free Market" in November 1991:

> Private property is the real human right, and the foundation of all freedom. If a church can't own its building, there can be no freedom of religion. If a newspaper can't own its newsprint, there can be no freedom of press. If there is no private land there can be no freedom of speech.

As Pope Pius XII said on September 1, 1944:

> Private property is a natural fruit of labor, a product of intense activity of man, acquired through his energetic determination to ensure and develop with his own strength, his own existence, and that of his family, and to create for himself and his own an existence of just freedom, not only economic, but also political, cultural and religious.

Our Founding Fathers clearly understood this truth and the importance of this fundamental right. They provided for its protection in the fifth amendment's provision that "* * * private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation." Unfortunately, many in the Federal Government and in the environmental community seem to forget this fundamental truth. I believe that the Founding Fathers would be turning over in their graves if they knew what the Federal bureaucracy was doing in the name of the environment.

The very foundation of our fundamental right to use our own property is under tremendous attack in this country right now. Just as the former Soviet Union and Eastern bloc are discovering the critical need for private property, there are those in this country who in the name of environmental protection would seek to destroy the right to use your own land.

At best these extremists tend to believe that our traditional notions of private property are old fashioned throwbacks to our capitalist past that have outlived their usefulness. At worst they believe that all resources are to be shared by the masses and that they should be managed by the Government for the benefit of all.

If we don't stand up to these radicals and counter the slide toward Government imposed environmental extremism, we will produce the same disastrous standard of living now being suffered by the former Soviet Union. If this happens our families, our society and our environment will all pay the price.

Our environment will suffer because the single largest cause of environmental degradation in the world is poverty. And one of the major causes of poverty in this country is the excessive regulatory climate that has make jobs this Nation's largest export. We can't build anything anymore in this country because we can't afford the costs associated with permitting, regulations, and lawsuits. The most egregious examples are found with the wetlands regulations under section 404 of the Clean Water Act and the requirements of the Endangered Species Act.

In order to remedy these most intrusive statutes this bill would require that if the Federal Government effectively confiscates half the value of your property then they will be obligated to pay for it. In order to be fiscally responsible this legislation requires the agency responsible for the taking must reimburse the treasury for the cost of the taking.

The bill also clarifies that Federal employees who enter onto private property must get written permission before they can do so. They must also make available at no charge any information that is found on the property and give the landowner the opportunity to challenge the validity of the data. This will prevent the types of abuses that have occurred in several programs such as the National Natural Landmarks Program.

If we are to reverse the slide we must all band together and fight. I and several of my colleagues will continue to fight to protect true wetlands, provide habitat for wildlife, and protect property rights but we need the help of every owner of property or those who wish to own property.

If we all work together I am convinced that we can protect property rights and still have a cleaner environment, because there is no better steward of the land than the person who owns it. If we provide some incentives the private sector will help improve our Nation's resources, not destroy them. All we need is to get back to the concepts of the private property and stewardship that built this country and I believe this legislation is a critical first step.

A GOLDEN OPPORTUNITY FOR UNITY

HON. JERROLD NADLER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. NADLER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to inform my colleagues of the outstanding work of an organization in my congressional district which is working to heal the rifts which have for too long divided our city and our Nation along racial and ethnic lines. The Foundation for Ethnic Understanding, an organization of concerned citizens, is working to promote understanding and peace between the diverse communities that make up the greatest and most vibrant of cities in the world.

They have chosen as their emblem the GOLDEN OpportUNITY FOR UNITY universal harmony insignia created by Artist-in-Residence Regi Taylor.

The foundation president, Rabbi Marc Schneier, has called the GOLDEN opportUNITY for UNITY an artistic expression which exemplifies a very profound social ideal. Rabbi Schneier has observed that:

> Regi has, in this work, captured the spirit of mutual ethnic understanding, respect and cooperation which is at the foundation's philosophical core. I believe we can reach multitudes with the insignia's message, encouraging positive racial dialog on a large scale.

Regi Taylor's vision is equally forward looking, and his work demonstrates the power of artistic expression to affect people deeply and truly change the world.

Mr. Speaker, sometimes it seems that mistrust, a failure to communicate, and fear combine to fuel the fires of hatred in our Nation and around the world. We need potent and profound reminders that our strength lies in our diversity and our ability to build on the combined strengths of many traditions. We are Americans, not so much because of where we are from, but because of what we have done here together to build this Nation. Each of us has a part. As we face the challenges that lie ahead, we are going to need the talents and abilities of everyone.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud that in the city of New York, neighbors are working together for a better day. They are using the power of artistic expression and the moral leadership of example to bring about the kind of change we will need if this Nation is to survive. I am pleased to commend their efforts to my colleagues.

TRIBUTE TO LT. GEN. NEAL T. JACO

HON. FRANK TEJEDA

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. TEJEDA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Lt. Gen. Neal T. Jaco, commanding general of the 5th U.S. Army and Fort Sam Houston in San Antonio, TX. General Jaco's retirement ceremony is Friday, February 25, and I know that I can speak for many in the San Antonio community when I say his presence and his service will be sorely missed.

General Jaco was born in Springfield, MO, on October 28, 1937. He was commissioned through the ROTC program in 1959, and holds a bachelor's degree from Southwest Missouri State University and a master's degree in international relations from George Washington University. His military education includes the infantry officer's basic course, the armor officer's advanced course, the Naval Command and Staff College, and the Army War College.

General Jaco has held several command and staff positions including: Battalion personnel officer and brigade operations officer at Fort Benning, GA; company commander and battalion operations officer in Korea; division operations adviser in Vietnam; and training staff officer at the Department of the Army Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for personnel.

In November 1975, General Jaco assumed command of the 1st Battalion, 28th Infantry at Fort Riley, KS. Just 1 year later, he took command of the 3d Battalion, 28th Infantry in West Germany. He later returned to Fort Riley to become the division personnel officer for the 1st Infantry Division. After attending the Army War College, General Jaco assumed duties as the corps personnel officer/director of personnel and community activities of III Corps and Fort Hood, TX. In May of 1982, he assumed command of the Armor Center and School Brigade at Fort Knox, KY. He then served as the operations officer for III Corps at Fort Hood. He transferred to Fort Polk, LA, where he served as the chief of staff for the 5th Infantry Division, and then returned to Fort Hood to assume duties as assistant division commander of the 2d Armored Division, and later, chief of staff of III Corps and Fort Hood.

General Jaco's most recent assignments include service as the commanding general of the U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center at Department of the Army. In May 1990, he assumed command of the 4th Infantry Division, mechanized, and Fort Carson, CO. He has earned many military awards including the Distinguished Service Medal, Legion of Merit, Bronze Star Medal, Meritorious Service Medal, Army Commendation Medal, Army Achievement Medal, Combat Infantryman Badge, Parachutist Badge, and the Army General Staff Identification Badge.

On November 14, 1991, General Jaco took command of 5th U.S. Army and Fort Sam Houston, TX. It was in this capacity that I began to work with General Jaco on matters of importance to the San Antonio community. Those of my colleagues who represent military bases know how often a Congressman is called upon to work with those bases, on constituent matters or on base issues. San Antonio has five military bases, so, over the years, I have worked with many commanders.

General Jaco is an accomplished leader, but he also is an accomplished listener. He knows how to command, and how to respond. He understands that an Army post is more than a collection of buildings and men and women, that it works with the surrounding community to solve common problems. Each time that I have asked for assistance in addressing an issue, General Jaco has responded quickly and courteously. He is a problem-solver with uncommon skill and zeal.

Being a leader is never easy. But it is all that much more difficult to manage the modern American Armed Forces in a time of such dramatic change. General Jaco came to Fort Sam Houston, an old and historic installation, in such a time of change for this Nation's military. We all know that the military budget is shrinking, and that our forces are being asked to do more with less. So a commander like General Jaco is asked to manage an installation a century old at a time of great technological change. And he must do so in the midst of a community that now numbers over a million people with all the urban problems and tensions that they can bring.

Let me say that General Jaco distinguished himself in the modern armed forces just as he distinguished himself on the battlefield. He has been a good friend to me, and more importantly, to the San Antonio community. But most of all, he has been everything that our armed services and this Nation could ask. On behalf of my colleagues, I would like to wish him many years of well-earned retirement, secure in the knowledge that he has many years of contribution to his country.

TRIBUTE TO ELIZABETH LACRETIA SINCLAIR

HON. JAMES E. CLYBURN

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. CLYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to an outstanding member of the community, Ms. Elizabeth Lacretia Sinclair, in honor of her 43 years as a teacher in the public schools of Columbia, SC.

It is fitting that we honor Ms. Sinclair during the month we celebrate as Black History Month. At 103 years of age, she has lived through many of the most significant events in African-American history, as well as world history. Few people are granted such longevity. After graduating from Benedict College, she began her teaching career in 1915, and, I imagine that she has outlived many of her former students. Having retired in 1958, she ended her illustrious teaching career before the dramatic civil rights events of the 1960's and 1970's.

It is a privilege to represent an individual such as Ms. Sinclair in the House of Representatives. The schools where she taught—the Old Waverly School, the I.S. Leevy School, and the Ridgewood Elementary School—were all located in what is now the Sixth Congressional District, which I am proud to represent.

Mr. Speaker, Elizabeth Sinclair is a living legacy who has stood the test of time. I join with her former students and community in honoring her on Saturday, February 26, 1994, at the Ridgewood Baptist Church for a distinguished life of service to young people and to mankind.

TRIBUTE TO CAPT. LARRY FRANKLIN

HON. HERB KLEIN

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Capt. Larry Franklin who is the first African-American captain in the history of the Paterson Fire Department. I am very proud to join Councilwoman Vera Ames and the city of Paterson Fire Department in congratulating him for his recent promotion and significant achievement.

Captain Franklin dreamed of serving all people and his community when he was young. After growing up in South Carolina, he received his formal education at the Passaic County Community College where he received his AAS degree in criminal justice/fire science. he is presently attending Jersey City State College where he will receive his bachelor of arts degree.

Captain Franklin has served as an emergency medical technical for 15 years, and believes that these have been the most rewarding years of his life. Captain Franklin has also helped the city of Paterson in other ways. He has worked the Paterson Public School system as a mentor of Project 2000 at Public School No. 6. Through this program, Captain Franklin visits classrooms and teaches students about fire prevention, fire education procedures, and first aid.

The Paterson Fire Department and the entire city of Paterson have benefited from Captain Franklin's service. His achievement of becoming Paterson's first African-American fire captain could not come at a better time as we celebrate Black History Month. For his valued effort, I join with my colleagues in wishing him continued success.

CONGRESSMAN MFUME SUPPORTS SAFE SCHOOLS ACT

HON. KWEISI MFUME

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. MFUME. Mr. Speaker, violence in our society has become a national crisis. Stories in the press about children as victims of crimes and children committing crimes seem to be more frequent and more gruesome. Too many American children are raised in neighborhoods fraught with drugs and violence, creating escalating cycles of violence. In order to help our youth break the cycles of violence, they must be provided a quality education. Unfortunately, the education of our young is hindered by the plague of drugs and violence in our schools. It is for this reason that I strongly support the Safe Schools Act.

A National School Boards Association survey shows that 82 percent of 729 school districts responding said that violence in their schools had increased over the past 5 years. In 1992, 2 percent of eighth graders, 4 percent of 10th graders and 3 percent of 12th graders nationwide reported that they regularly carried a weapon to school. In addition, 14 to 19 percent of eighth, 10th and 12th graders reported being threatened with a weapon; 25 to 29 percent reported being threatened without a weapon; and 5 to 9 percent reported being injured with a weapon in school. According to newspaper accounts between 1986 and 1990 at least 71 persons—65 students and 6 school employees—were killed by guns at school, 201 were severely wounded, and 242 were held at gunpoint.

The plague of violence in our schools is epidemic. Although responsbility for school safety rests with State and local officials and the community, the crisis is overwhelming and financial resources and research are inadequate. The Safe Schools Act will provide grants to local education agencies which receive, or are eligible to receive, grant funds for concentrations of poverty and serve in an area with high crime rates. Local education agencies must also assess the violence in the schools and communities that will be served, have written safety and discipline policies, and explain how activities will be corrdinated with its education reform plan.

The grants included in the Safe Schools Act will support activities such as identifying and assessing the violence and discipline problems in schools; planning comprehensive, long-term strategies to address these problems; educating the community about the agencies safety plans, and developing and implementing violence prevention activities that may include conflict resolution, disciplinary alternatives to expulsion and suspension, peer mediation and counseling, and after school programs. Other activities include training staff to deal with violent behavior; providing safe passages between home and school, and security activities such as installing metal detectors and video surveillance devices.

The Safe Schools Act is long overdue. Our teachers cannot continue to attempt to educate our youth with the fear of being threatened or attacked by one of their students; children cannot continue to try to learn in spite of threat of danger within their own classrooms, and parents should not continue to fear for the safety of their children. The education of the youth of America has been compromised for far too long. The Safe Schools Act will not end the violence our society, but it is an important step in curbing the violence to which our children are exposed and provide them with a safe haven in which they may learn and grow.

NATIONAL FHA/HERO WEEK

HON. WILLIAM H. NATCHER

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, last week, February 13–19, was National FHA/HERO Week and at this time, I would like to say a few words about the Future Homemakers of America. FHA/HERO is a national vocational organization in which students participate in a variety of activities and projects focusing on the family and community service. Participation in these projects helps to prepare these young people to become community leaders, wage earners, and caring family members. This year's theme, "Make It Happen," emphasizes how FHA/HERO members make a difference in the lives of others while learning valuable skills for life.

In 1993 over 263,000 members in 10,200 chapters across the Nation were involved in projects stressing family relationships, self-esteem, nutrition, teen issues, and environmental awareness. They participated in programs such as Leaders at Work in Food Service designed to sharpen skills in communication, management, and entrepreneurship or the Community Service Award Program in which chapter members identify a specific community need and carry out a service project to meet that need.

In my home State of Kentucky there were 10,242 members in 249 FHA/HERO chapters last year. These students took part in programs such as STAR Events in which activities are designed to recognize student achievements in leadership and job-related skills. Many were involved in Power of One which includes completing individual projects in five areas: improving self, strengthening family life, exploring careers, developing leadership skills, and promoting the organization.

In Kentucky's Second Congressional District, there were 1,564 members during the past year. At this time, I would like to recognize those from the district I represent in Congress for their outstanding achievements through the FHA/HERO organization over the last year.

At the 1993 national leadership meeting in Anaheim, CA, the following were recognized for their participation in STAR Events: Melissa Moore from Marion County High School received a gold medal for the occupational job application and interview event; Nathan Johnson, Pam Barnes, Sara Ross, Shannon Johnson, and Amy Wallace of Greenwood High School received gold medals for parliamentary procedure.

Those from the Second Congressional District of Kentucky who received Power of One recognition at the national leadership meeting were: Stephanie Bowman, April Bryant, Donita Denton, Jamie Hood, Tonya London, and Kelly Smith of Barren County High School; Nellie Bratcher, Sandy Pennington, Kandy Pennington, Debra Ramsey, Darleen Singleton, and Wendy Trowbridge of Hart County High School; Howard Stinson III of Churchill Park High School; Misty Cable, Deanna Caulk, Kacey Chowning, Veronica Duka, Andrea Elliot, Ashlee Fields, Robin Gray, Jennifer Gribbons, Tabatha Greer, Melissa Howard, Kim Keeney, Chanci Knifely, Jessica Pierce, Anna Rogers, Dana Smith, Jennifer Spear, and Carla Underwood of Campbellsville High School.

I would also like to mention those from the district I represent who are serving on the State executive council. Sara Ross of Greenwood High School is vice president for achievement and Melissa Boils from Taylor County High School is activity leader.

At this time I would like to commend all of the members and advisors of FHA/HERO in the State of Kentucky and throughout the United States for their many accomplishments through this organization. All down through the years, FHA/HERO programs have taught young people useful problem-solving skills which enable them to help themselves while helping others in their families and communities. For this reason, those involved in FHA/HERO really are making it happen.

UNITED NATIONS MEMBERSHIP FOR TAIWAN

HON. WILLIAM J. JEFFERSON

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. JEFFERSON. Mr. Speaker, the United Nations today includes 184 member nations—almost all of the nations of the world, except Taiwan. Taiwan has a population of 21 million—more than that of 130 members of the United Nations, but Taiwan is not a member.

In the economic field, Taiwan is the 14th largest trading nation in the world; its gross national product is the world's 20th largest; its annual per capita income exceeds $10,000; it has the largest foreign exchange reserves worldwide at $80 billion; it is the United States' sixth largest trading partner. But again, Taiwan is not a member of the United Nations.

In the field of democracy, Taiwan has begun to make exceptional progress in recent years toward establishing democracy and securing political freedoms for its people. And again, Taiwan is not a member of the United Nations.

Despite this economic and political progress and despite the people of Taiwan's strong desire to be recognized as a political entity separate from China, Taiwan has not been the beneficiary of representation in the United Nations. This gross lack of international recognition has left 21 million Taiwanese voices unheard in world affairs.

It is uncontestable reality that the government in Taipei only exercises effective control over the Island of Taiwan and that the government in Beijing only exercises effective control over China. Since China is already seated on the United Nations' Security Council, I strongly believe that the people of Taiwan now also deserve a separate Taiwan seat in the United Nations.

It is important to realize that the fact that 21 million residents of free and democratic Taiwan are not represented in the United Nations clearly goes against the United Nations' principle of universal representation.

When the United Nations replaced the government in Taipei with the government in Beijing in 1971, this was done in order to "strengthen the authority and prestige of the UN." And with Taiwan's ever increasing economic and political importance, the same argument which was used for China over 20 years ago must be applied to Taiwan's current bid to join the United Nations. Taiwan must now also join the United Nations in order to "strengthen the authority and prestige of the United Nations."

IMPROVEMENTS TO PUBLIC HOUSING

HON. MARGE ROUKEMA

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation making much needed improvements to our public housing and related housing programs.

Many of these provisions were requested by the Department of Housing and Urban Development last year but were not acted on by the Banking Committee. Many of these provisions also have the support of the public housing industry as well.

Mr. Speaker, there are over 3,100 public housing authorities throughout the Nation providing critically needed affordable housing to well over 100,000 low- and moderate-income families, elderly persons and those who are handicapped. Most of these authorities are doing a very good job and are providing the safe, decent, and affordable housing the law requires.

However, there are a small group of housing authorities who are faced with such overwhelming problems as crime, drugs, deteriorating developments, poor location, few job opportunities for their residents, and excessive vacancies which has resulted in the negative reputation accorded public housing in general. Regrettably, some of these PHA's are just not up to the task of running a successful public housing program.

My legislation is intended to help eliminate some of the problems which may contribute to the difficulties many PHA's have in running their developments.

Specifically, my legislation makes several technical changes to existing programs in order to achieve efficiencies and addresses five major issues. These include:

SEVERELY DISTRESSED PUBLIC HOUSING

In the 1992 Housing Act, our committee created the Severely Distressed Public Housing Program (aimed at providing funds to clean up the worst public housing projects). While the committee was waiting to finish that bill (October), the Appropriations Committee funded a similar program called Urban Revitalization Program. However, the appropriations bill required that the provisions of the two initiatives be conformed. This provision does that. Specifically, the legislation:

Requires applicants to propose community service as part of the revitalization effort;

Eliminates the requirement to publish a list of severely distressed projects;

Clarifies replacement rules to allow section 8 assistance rather than new units in certain circumstances;

Raises the cap on amount of funds which can be used for support services from 15 percent to 20 percent; and Eliminates the requirement that grant awards be made on a geographic basis.

INCOME DISALLOWANCE

Under current law, a public housing tenant pays a rent based on 30 percent of his/her earned income. So, when a public housing resident moves from welfare to work, their rent immediately increases. This has often provided a disincentive to work. This section would allow the PHA to either deduct 20 percent of the earned income for purposes of the rent calculation or freeze the families current rent for 18 months as incentives for encouraging work. The legislation also allows the PHA to discount part of the salary earned by a dependent who lives in the same unit. This would eliminate the penalty for a family who has a son or daughter who secures employment to help the family survive.

CEILING RENTS

Because of the location or condition of some public housing, the 30 percent of income rule may actually result in a family paying rent in excess of the actual value of the apartment thus forcing the family—especially working families—to seek better living accommodations. The result is often an increase in vacancy rates or occupancy by a nonworking family which requires additional Federal subsidy. My provision would allow the PHA to set rents based on the market value of the apartment in order to allow working families to remain in their public housing apartment.

STREAMLINE PUBLIC HOUSING DEVELOPMENT

This provision would attempt to streamline public housing development by giving PHA's more flexibility in the type, size, location, and design of the units they are developing or replacing. It would eliminate current unrealistic cost limits; would allow PHA's to use non-Federal funds for development amenities without reducing the overall grant they would receive; it allows PHA's to build to local neighborhood standards and to use local housing codes. The provision would also allow the PHA to change the development plan after receiving a grant without going back through the HUD approval process. And finally, it would provide the PHA an incentive for achieving cost savings by allowing the PHA to share 50 percent of any savings generated by efficient and timely development of units.

PAYMENT IN LIEU OF TAXES

Currently, public housing developments are not assessed a local property tax. In lieu of this, the PHA and the local unit of government negotiate an amount of payment to be made by the PHA for services such as education of the children in the development, refuse collection and police protection. However, the payment is based on a formula which takes a percentage of the actual rents collected by the PHA. In many areas of the country, the rents paid by the tenants are so low that the payment made to the local government is almost negligible. My provision would not change the formula currently in use but it would require a minimum payment for each unit occupied by a family in a public housing development.

Mr. Speaker, these proposed changes to the operation of public housing represent modest but sensible changes to the way we do business. All of them represent improvements designed to enhance the efficiency and effectiveness of our Federal housing programs.

THE PRIVATE PROPERTY OWNERS BILL OF RIGHTS

HON. W.J. (BILLY) TAUZIN

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce legislation that every property owner in America should welcome. The private property owners bill of rights reawakens America's commitment to the concept of private ownership of property. The greatness of our country arises from the economic opportunities afforded by the use and ownership of private property. Ownership of property makes most of us better citizens and increases our involvement in local and national government activities. Our Government ought to be encouraging, not discouraging private property ownership.

As we watch former Communist governments move in the direction of a free enterprise economy based on ownership of private property, our own Government is moving in the opposite direction. Greater burdens are being placed on private property owners and the Government is making it riskier to own private property. An individual who purchases property, assumes the debt to make that investment, and pays substantial property taxes, should at least be able to expect that the Government will not actively work to prevent some return on that investment.

Unfortunately, there is a growing attitude within the Federal bureaucracy that it is acceptable to disregard the legal rights of private property owners, as long as the goal is a laudable one. There is a growing movement to preserve various types of habitat in order to protect plants and animals to benefit the general public but at the total expense of the individual property owner. Many of these owners have been good stewards of their property, preserving forests and wetlands in their natural state. However, when those landowners choose to use their property, they are prevented from using it because it has been preserved.

I have had constituents in my district who were denied wetlands permits to use their land based on the fact that their property was wooded or provided habitat. When a landowner is denied a permit to use their land for an activity that would otherwise be harmless, I believe that this is a taking. The fifth amendment of our Constitution clearly states that private property may not be taken for a public purpose unless just compensation is paid. Our Constitution was adopted, not just to grant power to the Government, but also to limit the power of the Government and to protect the rights of the individual. Without the protection of the fifth amendment, our Government could solve all its budgetary problems by simply confiscating any property it needed for any purpose at will through restrictive regulations. The fifth amendment is a curb on the abuse of power by Government and the compensation provision makes Government accountable for its actions.

If the Government can force land into public service as habitat or for flood control purposes, without the payment of compensation, then Government can and will abuse its citizens by taking property freely for any well-intended public program.

The bill I introduce today is intended to make our Government accountable to its citizens. The bill clearly sets forth that it shall be a Federal policy to encourage, support, and promote the private ownership of property. Most of the cases that have arisen in which landowners have lost the use of their property have been under the Endangered Species Act and the wetlands permitting program under section 404 of the Clean Water Act. Therefore, the bill limits most of its provisions to these two acts. Let me make it clear that I support the goals of both of these laws. However, they can be carried out without depriving property owners of their legal rights.

The bill requires Federal agents who enter private property to gather information under either the Endangered Species Act or under section 404 to first obtain the written consent of the landowner. It guarantees administrative appeals for landowners from decisions made under ESA or 404. Property owners are guaranteed the right of access to information gathered on their property and the right to dispute the accuracy of the information. The bill requires that when property is devalued by 50 percent or more based on a decision under ESA or the wetlands permitting program he or she is entitled to be compensated.

Administrative procedures are established so that property owners have a simple and inexpensive way to seek a fair and equitable resolution of their claim that their property has been taken. Currently if a property owner is denied the use of their property, their only recourse is to file a suit in the U.S. Court of Claims in Washington. The suits that have been filed have taken many years to litigate and hundreds of thousands of dollars and, in most of the cases, the litigation continues without resolution. Most of our constituents simply cannot afford the claims court process with all its procedural and financial hurdles.

We need a process in which the agency deals fairly and equitably with the landowner. This bill will accomplish that result. The fifth amendment is clear that property should not be taken for a public purpose without compensation. There is no exception in the fifth amendment for wetlands or the Endangered Species Act. The private property owners bill of rights will bring sanity and responsibility back to the manner in which our Federal Government carries out these laws.

I urge my colleagues to join with me in cosponsoring this bill.

AUSPICIOUS CHANCE FOR HILL'S FRESHMEN

HON. NEWT GINGRICH

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of all of my colleagues an enlightening article in the Washington Times on February 8, 1994. The article was written by Congresswoman JENNIFER DUNN entitled "Auspicious Chance for Hill's Freshman."

I think that she hit on some extremely vital points in regard to reform within Congress. I hope that all of my colleagues will take some time to read what the Congresswoman from Washington has to say and learn from it.

[From the Washington Times, Feb. 8, 1994]

AUSPICIOUS CHANCE FOR HILL'S FRESHMEN

(By Jennifer Dunn)

Most American citizens thought 1993 would be the "year of reform" in Congress. To drive the message home, voters sent 114 new faces to the House of Representatives to improve the way Congress conducts its business. But 1993 yielded little reform.

Now, early in 1994, those reform-minded freshmen have the opportunity to fish or cut bait on reform. As early as March, the House will take up the pallid recommendations of the temporary reform panel, known as the Joint Committee on the Organization of Congress.

This committee, which was formed over a year ago amidst House bank and post office scandals, was charged with seeking improvements in the operation of the House and Senate. Unlike most committees in Congress, it was comprised with complete fairness in mind. It was bicameral—with 14 members from the House and 14 from the Senate—and composed equally of Democrat and Republican members.

Over the course of the year, the committee heard hours of testimony from hundreds of current and former members of Congress, journalists, and other congressional scholars on what bold and sweeping changes were needed to improve how Congress conducts its business. Many reform-minded freshmen, both Democrat and Republican, have already supported various bold proposals to get at the obvious problems that plague the Congress. For instance:

The present committee structure is an inefficient, ineffective tangle. The House and Senate do not have coordinated structures. In each, jurisdiction over legislation is shared by so many committees competing for political "turf," that issues of national priority can become bogged in gridlock.

The chaotic scheduling system now forces members of Congress to race back and forth from one hearing to another, often interrupted to go to the floor for votes, then back to committee hearings or meetings with constituents. Using "proxy" votes, members don't even have to be present when major decisions are made in committee.

One result of the helter skelter on Capitol Hill is that Congress frequently fails to adequately follow up on, or oversee, effects of legislation. A painful example was the savings-and-loan debacle.

There should be more turnover among committee chairmen. At present, chairmen exercise far too much power over the shaping of legislation, Committee staff, unelected and entrenched, hold too much power, as well.

(The committee discovered that more than 80 committee staff members received salaries above $110,000 a year. That's more than Gen. Colin Powell made as chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.)

Too many public-policy decisions are made behind closed doors. (House Resolution 237, The "Sunshine bill," would force virtually all committee action decisions to be made in open session.)

For democracy to work effectively, there's need for more thoughtful deliberation of issues and for the voice of the minority to be heard.

Congress has become a place where debate is often stifled by rules that endow the majority party with overwhelming power. Minority Republicans and reform-minded Democrats are often prevented from offering amendments or alternative ideas.

That unnecessarily inflames and raises the level of rancor in the House.

In late November came the moment for the Joint Committee's decisions. In a series of party-line votes, House Democrats thwarted significant reforms. Primarily cosmetic changes were recommended.

There was no bold reform of the committee system, no change in the overlapping jurisdictions of committees that contribute to gridlock (As one example, more than 40 committees and subcommittee will continue to claim jurisdiction over surface transportation.)

There was refusal to require computerized scheduling, to avoid conflicts of meetings. There was refusal to have the House adopt the Senate schedule—three weeks of work per month, with a full week to spend with citizens in the home district.

There was broad committee agreement on a two-year budget-appropriations cycle, rather than the present one-year cycle. That can afford better oversight of programs.

The final report of the Joint Committee, drawing public criticism for the mostly pale, pastel changes it recommends, is on the action agenda now that the House has reconvened.

Clearly, powerful committee chairmen, and other senior members of the majority party have a stake in preserving the status quo and will continue to attempt to thwart any effort to bring real change to our legislative process. Republicans (especially the freshmen among them) have led the reform charge since they owe no fealty either to the White House or Democratic committee chairmen.

This leaves only one hope for reform: the Democratic freshmen.

Stuck between the rock of their campaign promises and the hard position presented by leaders of their party who prefer the status quo, Democratic freshmen will be on the spot. But there is evidence that many of them will rise to the occasion. Many of them privately express great frustration with the lack of reform in 1993. Many have assured me that they will support open meetings, bans on proxy voting and other bold reforms anathema to senior Democrats.

Should the Democratic freshmen take up the cause and join with their Republican counterparts as they did when the veil of secrecy was lifted from the discharge petition, we may yet achieve the significant improvements in the operations of Congress largely disdained by their senior colleagues. Then, regardless of which party controls the House, Congress will be the better for our efforts.

TRIBUTE TO CAROL PARRY

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, I am indeed pleased to recognize the sterling achievements of Carol Parry, managing director in charge of the community development group at Chemical Bank. Carol is responsible for all lending for low and moderate income multifamily housing; corporate contributions and community outreach; the Minority and Women Vendor Program, and Community Reinvestment Act compliance. Additionally, she also chairs the Chemical Bank Community Development Corp.

Carol's career includes 25 years of management experience in the financial services industry. Ms. Parry has the distinction of being named the first woman senior vice president for the company. She was formerly the director of Manufacturers Hanover's regional banking group's business banking unit, responsible for the bank's tri-State area relationships with small- and mid-size businesses with annual sales generally in the $3 to $50 million range.

Among her other notable accomplishments, she is the former chairwoman of the Brooklyn Navy Yard Board of Directors. The board is responsible for overseeing and setting policy for the center which houses 190 businesses employing 3,000 people. The Navy Yard has been an economic lifeline in Brooklyn. Under Carol's stewardship, profits rose from $500,000 in 1991 to $1 million per year in 1993; revenue increased from $11 million to $13.7 million from 1991 to 1993; tenancies increased from 150 to 200; and occupancy rose from 90 to 95 percent. There can be no doubt that Ms. Parry's management and financial prowess was largely responsible for those improvements.

Carol Parry is a graduate of Tufts University, and also has a M.S.W. degree from the University of Connecticut School of Social Work. I am immensely pleased to recognize this outstanding professional. She has demonstrated that she not only cares about the Brooklyn community, but has worked diligently to ensure its vitality.

THOMAS P. "TIP" O'NEILL, JR. HONORED

HON. JAMES P. MORAN

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to submit a recent transcript by the Reuter's news service of an interview I had with Fox "Morning News" honoring the late Speaker, the Honorable Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill, Jr.

A FAREWELL TO "THE MAN OF THE HOUSE"

LARK MCCARTHY. Virginia Congressman Jim Moran felt a special kinship with Tip O'Neill. Their families hailed from the same neighborhood in Boston. Jim Moran joins us now to reflect on the life and times of Tip O'Neill.

Is this the end of an era?

Representative MORAN. I think he may have been the last of the great, truly unapologetic liberals. He really believed in what he did. You know, we asked him one time, "What's the definition of a liberal?" And he used the story of how he had been told by Dr. DeBaecky (sp), I think it was, that if they could develop this drug, they could extend the height of dwarfs by three to six inches. And he went back to the Appropriations Committee and insisted that they put this money in. And he got all kinds of derisive laughter. The Wall Street Journal criticized him and the Republicans criticized him. In fact, the big joke was that, why don't they just go down and buy a Cuban lift for all of their shoes, and it would save the taxpayers a lot of the money. But he insisted.

And today, you know, if a child is born a dwarf, their parent can take them down to Baylor University and extend their height by about six inches. And, you know, you can never measure something like that, but he was proud of it because those people are going to be able to live lives with a little greater dignity. He said that you could probably add up all the mistakes in dollars and cents, but I don't think you can ever quantify what good we've been able to accomplish. And I know that's true, that his life was of immeasurable value. But the people that benefited most are the ones we'll never hear from.

Ms. MCCARTHY. Yes. He liked to think of himself as the working man, working class politician, didn't he?

Representative MORAN. You know, over 50 years, he had to run every other year. He never lost an election. And he said, it's because he kept the same wife, the same values.

Ms. MCCARTHY. And he always called her, "My Millie," right?

Representative MORAN. Yes. He married her back in 1941. The same wife, the same values, and the same lifestyle—he never changed. And, in fact, in his recent book that he was nice enough to autograph for me and write some nice words, that's what he talks about. You've got to stay the same. You've got to know what you believe in. And you've got to live your life that way. And he did. And I think he was a great guy. He may have had——

Ms. McCARTHY. Just quickly, because he's also being remembered as the last of the old Boston-Irish halls, and your family is from that same area. What was it about, that climate or that time, you know, that Boston influence on him?

Representative MORAN. Well, you know, he was personable. He just loved to be with people. They believed in him. I'll never forget. I mean, during the 1990 campaign, I got this check for $176.82, signed by Thomas P. O'Neill. And I was so desperate for money—it was my first campaign and all—I cashed it. I'll never forgive myself for doing that. But later on, he told me that it was the last check he had ever written out of his office. He paid off all his debts. He gave money to every good cause that he had ever wanted to, and he was left with $176.82, and he sent it to me.

You know, most members of Congress—and I think they would agree—would have walked off with hundreds of thousands of dollars after having served as Speaker for that many years. But he never kept anything for himself. His reward was in the good that he did, and he did an awful lot of good.

TRIBUTE TO EVANS SCOGGINS

HON. GEORGE (BUDDY) DARDEN

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. DARDEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Mr. Evans Scoggins of Summerville, GA, a man who has made a contribution of inestimable value to the well-being of his community. Evans has served for the past 15 years on the Boy Scouts of America Executive Board. He has been involved in the Boy Scouts for 66 years, since he first joined the Scouts in 1927. He later became Scout Leader of Troop 7.

Mr. Speaker, I can think of few who are better role models for young people than Evans Scoggins. His enthusiasm, respect for others, and dedication to youth have helped to improve the quality of life in northwest Georgia. However, I can offer no words of praise for Evans higher than those bestowed upon him by former Scouts he has led. Listen to the words of praise for Evans Scoggins from former Troop 7 Boy Scouts. James "Bud" Jackson, who now owns the Jackson Drug Co., said this about Evans Scoggins: "He's a hero * * * He is a true hero because he took nothing for spending his life for young people." Or how about the words of Allan Eleam, the president of Guffin and Eleam Insurance, Inc. of Summerville: "I feel like what leadership qualities I have were influenced by him and his Christian attitude." And Jon Payne, a probate court judge and former Troop 7 Scout remembers Evans spent so much time trying to teach us things that we needed to be taught about Scouts and about life.

Truly, no one can doubt that Evans Scoggins has distinguished himself in his work for young people. Evans has instilled in so many young men the moral and ethical principles and attitudes which are conducive to good character and citizenship. Most importantly, his teachings have stayed with these young men throughout their lives.

Mr. Speaker, a newspaper article on Evans Scoggins recently appeared in the Summerville News. With the consent of my colleagues in the House, I would like to submit this article for the RECORD.

BOY SCOUTING IS AN ADVENTURE—SCOGGINS INFLUENCES LIVES FOR MORE THAN 50 YEARS

(BY JULIE GRIFFIS)

Billy Mitchell still holds a special place in his heart for his former scoutmaster, as do other former Boy Scouts who grew up in Summerville.

Evans Scoggins has been involved in scouting for 66 years, since he first joined the scouts in 1927. Later he became a scout leader and for the past 15 years, he has served on the Boy Scouts executive board.

"Fred Ray, a Methodist minister, started the troop in Trion," Scoggins explained. "I joined and it (scouting) taught me more about life and had more effect on me than any one person I ever knew."

From that beginning, Scoggins became the person who had more effect on several area young boys than anyone they ever knew.

"He was like a father to me and other boys. He considered me one of his own," Mitchell recalled fondly from his home in Orange Park, Fla.

"He was a good motivator and has been to a lot of boys," added the retired Navy command master chief.

Scoggins said scouting taught him what he could do with his life.

According to Mitchell, Scoggins ran with that thought and used it to show others what they could do with their lives.

As a youngster, Scoggins said he attended the Rev. Ray's church, but never remembered anything that was said from the pulpit. But he remembered everything Ray said around the campfire.

"He taught us about other people and how to help them and the community," Scoggins said. "I learned that there's always something you can do for someone or the community whether you have money or not."

Scoggins, Job Development Specialist of the Chattooga County Chamber of Commerce Jobs Training Partnership Act (JTPA) program, was a Boy Scout until he was 17. He then began his work as scoutmaster of Summerville Troop 7. He led the troop for 31 years.

"I think the Boy Scout program turned my life around," Scoggins said. "I grew up during the Depression and it was tough."

"It doesn't matter how poor you are, in the Boy Scouts everyone is exactly alike. There's no such thing as a poor boy. They're all Boy Scouts," he added.

Once he became a scoutmaster, Scoggins said he had a fine troop—always the best one in the region.

"Some of the finest young men in the country came out of my troop," Scoggins said, naming off four lieutenant colonels, one colonel, teachers, pharmacists, ministers, etc.

"One reason I had a good troop is I always had good boys," he said, adding that he's taken as many as 95 boys on a camping trip at one time with no other adult help.

"I have no regrets for the nights I spent away from my wife with the boys. Thank God I had an understanding wife," he said.

Scoggins has attended three National Boy Scout Jamborees and one World Jamboree that hosted Boy Scouts from 100 countries and attended three National Order of the Arrow Conventions.

Through Scouting, Scoggins has met four presidents: Harry S. Truman, Dwight D. Eisenhower, John F. Kennedy and Richard M. Nixon.

"There are more opportunities in scouting for the average boy than any program I know of in the world," Scoggins said.

He led his last troop in 1976, deciding to retire from that phase of scouting for health reasons.

He worked in the textile trade for 43 years and was with the Georgia Department of Labor for five years. He accepted his position with JTPA nine years ago.

"If I had to do it over again, I'd spend another 50 years in scouting," he said. "It pays off in the community and people."

Scoggins still has a poem presented to him by scout Mitchell, several years ago, when Mitchell didn't have the money to buy his scoutmaster a Christmas present.

"He'll never know how much that poem meant to me," Scoggins said. And, by the look in his eyes you can tell it still means a lot.

"I can still see him standing there. I keep it (the poem) framed now. It's the most valuable thing in this house."

It follows:

SCOUT

(By Billy Mitchell)

If I were asked to name a man
I thought was really great
I wouldn't have to ponder or even hesitate.
He's as gentle as my mother, yet he's firm and strict with rules
And he teaches us so many things we could never learn at school.
Yes, wherever I may go
The greatest man I know is our scoutmaster
He listens to our troubles, he's so gentle and so kind
And He's so understanding he can almost read our mind.
He works so hard to help us and he gives his time so free
And I wish that I could thank him for all he's done for me.
Yes, wherever I may go
The greatest man I know is my scoutmaster.
When I see a scout official I raise my head so high
Like a soldier in the army when a general passes by.
They will never, never die when their time on earth is spent
In the hearts of all their boys they have built their monument.
Yes, wherever I may go
The greatest man I know is our scoutmaster.
And to all the scout officials with your hearts so big and true
I say thank you, and God bless you for the glorious work you do.

Scoggins kept his scouts busy.

"We planted 2,000 pine trees in 1954. I saw them being cut not long ago," he explained. "We put up 75 feed stations for birds and squirrels, and cleared 15 piles of brush and 500 feet of creek.

The troop attended five gun safety demonstrations, and averaged about one camping trip a month. While under Scoggins' leadership, his troop even won a national camping award.

And through it all, Scoggins said it was worth every night he was kept awake during those camping trips long ago.

"They'd slip around and pull the pegs out of my tent and the tent would fall down on me," he grinned.

"I used to be a boy with 'em," Scoggins laughed. "And it liked to have killed me."

A simple way to describe Evans Scoggins is as a "hero."

And the meaning behind that is best explained by former Troop 7 boy scout James "Bud" Jackson, who was a member of Scoggins' troop for four years.

"He's a hero—a hero of mine," the Jackson Drug Co., owner and pharmacist said. "He did all that work for all those people just for the good it did. Most heroes are sports people and greedy folks with big salaries. He (Scoggins) is a true hero because he took nothing for spending his life for young people.

"He's led an exemplary life in an exemplary way—a good way. And, at an age when most people say, 'I've done enough,' he's helping people find jobs."

Jackson not only described a man who was his hero as a child, but to this day remains a hero and continues to make an impression on him.

Just about everyone who was a scout back then wanted to be in Troop 7, according to Lann Cordle, Chattooga clerk of court, who was in Scoggins' troop for about two to three years.

"There was a troop in Trion and another one in Summerville, but everyone knew Troop 7 was the best one and that was the one they wanted to be in," explained Cordle, who is now an assistant scout leader for Troop 7.

When asked about Scoggins, Cordle replied, "I don't have anything but praises for the man. He means a lot to me and any boy who was in the troop. He's given a lot of folks, some wouldn't have had the opportunities in life they had if it wasn't for him."

"He was always ready to listen to you and help in any way he could," Cordle continued. "I don't know how he kept from having a nervous breakdown. We'd all load up in a big truck and take off on a camping trip. When we got there, everyone jumped out and some of the boys he probably didn't see until it was time to leave. A good time was had by everybody."

Cordle said he'd never be able to oversee 95 scouts on a campout like Scoggins did.

"He had special days set aside to work on ranks and stuff. He just seemed to give and give, and give and give of himself."

Allan "Butch" Eleam, a scout under Scoggins' leadership for five years, attributes most of his leadership qualities to his former scoutmaster.

"I feel like what leadership qualities I have were influenced by him and his Christian attitude," Eleam said.

Eleam is president of Guffin and Eleam Insurance Inc., Summerville. He is a past president of the Summerville-Trion Rotary Club and currently serves as sergeant of arms for the organization. He also is a former Eagle scout.

He remembers when Troop 7 was one of the largest.

"Around 1968 or '69 we went on a camping trip and 116 boys went. Nowadays most scout camps with dozens of troops might not have 116 boys," he explained.

Eleam attributes the size of the campout and the size of the troop to Scoggins "making it fun."

"He's a real leader," Eleam summed up.

Jon Payne, Probate Court judge, remembers a bunch of rambunctious boys and Scoggins on several campouts.

"One time, we were camping out in a field owned by a farmer who also had a watermelon patch," Payne fondly remembered. "That night, the watermelon patch got raided. I had nothing to do with it, of course."

"Boy, did he (Scoggins) get mad at us...uh...I mean them," Payne added. "He had to work something out with the farmer."

"And there was another time when we all had new sleeping bags and didn't want to sleep inside out tents. It was a beautiful night but he (Scoggins) said it was going to rain, Payne said.

"Well, we weren't worried because our new sleeping bags were waterproof, or so we thought. Actually they were water repellent. Around 10 or 11 p.m. it started to pour. We were soaked. I remember we had to get in the back of the truck. We ate peanut brittle," he said.

"He's a super person," Payne said. "He's taken care of so many of us kids for several years and helped our parents keep us on the straight and narrow."

"He spend so much time away from his wife trying to teach us things that we needed to be taught about scouts and about life," the probate judge said.

THOMAS P. "TIP" O'NEILL, JR., HONORED

HON. ENI F.H. FALEOMAVAEGA

OF AMERICAN SAMOA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA. Mr. Speaker, I rise this afternoon to pay tribute to Thomas P. O'Neill, Jr., Speaker of the House of Representatives from 1977 to 1987.

In 1977 when Tip O'Neill was elected to the position of Speaker, I was a staffer with the House Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs. Having come shortly after the watershed year of 1974 and the post-Watergate elections, it was time for a change in the congressional leadership, and Tip O'Neill was a new kind of leader. Less autocratic than the previous Speakers, his manner was well suited to the House of Representatives at that time, and remains so today.

Speaker O'Neill's style of leadership was one of personal contact, and in that vein he spent a considerable amount of his time talking to his colleagues. His door was routinely open to the other Members of the House of Representatives, and the Members used the opportunity presented to them. This was also true for his work in his congressional district.

The stories of his local upbringing and his never forgetting his roots are legendary, as is his quote "all politics are local." His willingness to hold open sessions in his district office, even when he was Speaker, is commendable, and points out that he practiced what he preached—most of the time.

I am reminded of the story he told that when campaigning for reelection he frequently saw and remembered a lady over a 20-year period. Each time he would greet her, always assuming she had voted for him in the past and that she would vote for him at the next election. It was only after doing this for 20 years that it came up in conversation that, in fact, she had not voted for him all those years. When asked why she had not, she responded that candidate O'Neill never asked her to.

Speaker O'Neill said this incident reminded him again that "all politics are local." Despite constant repetitions of this political truism, even a consummate politician and creator of the phrase needed an occasional reminder as to its ramifications. That is a lesson we can all take to heart, and with today's computerized voting records and increased public disclosure of the operations of government, the lesson is even more relevant today than it was in the past.

Mr. Speaker, Speaker O'Neill's reputation has spread much further than many of us would think. I recently received a copy of a resolution passed by the Legislature of American Samoa, paying tribute to the accomplishments and public service of Tip O'Neill, and I request the resolution be included with my statement today.

The Twenty-Third Legislature, Third Regular Session, H.C.R. No. 23-21.

HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION

A House concurrent resolution paying tribute to the accomplishments and public service of the late Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill and conveying the condolences of the Legislature and people of American Samoa to Mrs. O'Neill and family.

Whereas, the former democratic Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, the Honorable Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill at the age of 81 passed away peacefully at Boston's Brigham and Women's Hospital on January 5, 1994; and

Whereas, Minority Leader Bob Dole characterizes Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill as "* * * the model of what a Representative and a leader of the American people should be" and that "he will go down in history as one of the great political leaders of our time"; and

Whereas, a close friend of the former Speaker said that "when he would talk to an audience about seniors or about the government's responsibility to help the less fortunate, you could hear a pin drop. He captivated people, he moved them, and he appealed to what's best in us."; and

Whereas, Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill honored American Samoa with an official visit which is fondly remembered by the people of American Samoa; and

Whereas, Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill has rendered outstanding service to the people of the United States through his many years of community and public service; and

Whereas, it is fitting and proper to commend and thank this great person and pay tribute to his compassionate, generous and highly skilled service to his people; and

Whereas, Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill's passing away not only is tragedy to Mrs. O'Neill and his family, but is a great loss to the people of the United States and her territories: now, therefore, be it:

"Tip" O'Neill on the occasion of his passing; and

tuli Toloa,
President of the Senate.

Speaker of the House.
